it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Lect.

They are cooped in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant, lest, knowing more, they should believe the less in them. Lect.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again. Pope.

COOPER, n. f. [coop, French.] A motion in dancing.

A COOPER, n. f. [from coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child.

CO-OPERAGE, n. f. [from coop.] The price paid for cooper's work.

TO CO-OPERATE, v. n. [con and opera, Latin.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end.
It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends. Bacon.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity. Boyle.
2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion. Chyane.

The special ads and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this change, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our reach and comprehension.

COOPERATION, n. f. [from cooperate.] The act of contri-buteing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon.

CO-OPERATIVE, adj. [from cooperate.] Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERATOR, n. f. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COORDINATION, n. f. [coops, Latin.] Adoption; assumption.
COORDINATE, adj. [con and ordinatus, Latin.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shell-fish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testa-ceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connections, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.
COORDINATELY, adv. [from coordinate.] In the same rank;
in the same relation; without subordination.

COORDINATENESS, n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COORDINATION, n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination

of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Huvel.

When these pretty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lyfidius has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state. Dryden.

COOT. n. f. [mar-koot, Dut. coet, French.] A small black water-fowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

A lake, the haunt

Dryden.

COP. n. f. [isp, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing arising to a head. As a cop, vulgarly co k of hay; a cab-copple, properly cap-cattle, a small cattle or house on a hill; a cab of cherry-stones for cap, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuton the head of birds.

COPAL. n. f. The Mexican term for a gum.

COPARCENARY. n. f. [from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In the descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter.

Hale's History of Common Law.

COPARCENER. n. f. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor. Covell.

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used, in the whole province. Davies.

COPARCENY. n. f. [See COPARCENER.] An equal share of coparceners. Philips.

COPARTNER. n. f. [co and partner.] One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partner; a partner.

Our faithful friends,

Milton.

Th' associates and copartners of our lofs.

Shall I to him make known

As yet my change, and give him to partake

Full happiness with me? Or rather not

But keep the odds of knowledge in my pow'r,

Without copartner?

Milton.

Rather by them

I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell

Copartner in these regions of the world.

Milton.

COPARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from copartner.] The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, and no sons, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership.

Hale's History of Common Law.

COPATAIN. adj. [from cape.] High tailed; pointed. Hammer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloak, and a copetain hat. Shakespeare.

COPAYVA. n. f. [It is sometimes written capivo, capivo, cupoyva, cupoyva, cupoyva, cupoyba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brazil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPES. n. f. [See COP.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.

2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministration.

3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained

Within this godly cope, both moist and least,

Their being have, and daily are increas'd.

Spenser.

Over head the dismal his

Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;

And, flying, vaulted either host with fire;

So, under fiery cope, together rush'd

Both battles main. Milton.

The scholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is so knowing as his master. Dryden.

TO COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood, and cooped over head. Addison.

2. To reward; to give in return.

I and my friend

Have, by your wisdom, been this day acquitted

Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,

Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,

We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shakespeare.

3. To contend with; to oppose.

Know my name is lost;

By treason's tooth bare gnawn, and canker bit;

Yet I am noble as the adversary I come to cope. Shakespeare.

TO COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to struggle; to strive. It has with before the thing or person opposed.

In this sense it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Janius derives it from koop, to buy, or some other word of the same import; so that to cope with, signifies to interchange blows, or any thing else, with another.

Let our trains

March by us, that we may peruse the men

We should have cop'd withal. Shakespeare.

It is likely thou wilt undertake

A thing, like death, to chide away this flame,

'T hat copest with death itself, to 'scape from it. Shakespeare.

But Eve was Eve;

This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd

And rash, beforehand had no better weigh'd

The strength he was to cope with, or his own. Milton.

They perfectly understood both the hares, and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Estrange.

On every plain,

Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war. Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addison.

If the mind apply itself first to easier subjects, and things near a kin to what is already known; and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by slow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy success. Watts.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindness or sentiments.

Thou fresh piece

Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know

The royal fool thou cop'st with. Shakespeare.

I will make him tell the tale anew;

Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when

He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shakespeare.

Thou art 'en as just a man,

As e'er my conversation cop'd withal. Shakespeare.

COPPEL. See COPPEL.

COPPEMATE. n. f. [perhaps for cupmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the same cope, for house.] Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever staid in place, ne spake to wight,

'Till that the fox his copemate he had found. Spenser.

COPPIER. n. f. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a transcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.

2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiarist of others. Dryden.

Let the saint copier, on old Tyber's shore,

Nor mean the task, each breathing bust explore;

Line after line with painful patience trace,

This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace. Tickell.

COPPING. n. f. [from cope.] The upper tier of masonry which covers the wall.

All these were of costly stones, even from the foundation unto the coping. King, vii. 9.

The copings, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble face by their graceful projections. Addison.

COPIOUS. adj. [copia, Latin.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious use of vinegar and acid fruits. Astruc.

The tender heart is peace,

And kindly pours its copious treasures forth

In various converse. Thomson.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

COPIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

2. At large; without brevity or conciseness; diffusely.

These several remains have been to copiously described by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new discoveries on so beaten a subject. Addison.

COPIOUSNESS. n. f. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.

2. Diffusion; exuberance of style.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes. Dryden.

COPYIST. n. f. [from copy.] A copyer; a transcriber; an imitator.

COPYLAND. n. f. A piece of ground in which the land terminates with an acute angle. Dia.

COPPED. adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

It was broad in its basis, and rose copped like a sugar-loaf. Warton.

COPPEL. n. f. [This word is variously spelt; as copel, cupel, cuple, and cuppel; but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed, to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and expelling it in the cuppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in drofs, which which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the cupel a tell. Harris

COPPER. n. f. [cuprum, Dut. cuprum, Latin.] One of the fix primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. It is not unfrequently found native in a malleable state, but in small quantities. In the state of ore it makes, according to its various admixtures, many very different appearances. The richer copper ores are found in many parts of Germany and Sweden; and we have some in England little inferior to the finest Swedish. Hill.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra.

COPPER. n. f. A vessel made of copper; commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen vessels. Bacon.

COPPER-NOSE. n. f. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Gutta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, looks red, and rises in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and in progress of time, make copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wijeman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. f. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the nearer impression: d distingué from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. f. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

This sort is like those now wrought at the copper-works.

Woodward on Fossils.

COPPERAS. n. f. [cupressus, Dut. cupressus, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the seashore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rain and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stone: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. When the boiling is finished, the liquor is drawn off into coolers, where it shoots into crystals of a fine green colour. This scititious copperas, in many respects, perfectly agrees with the native green vitriol of Germany; and is used in dying hats and cloths black, and in making ink. Chambers. Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transfused, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion. Bacon.

COPPERSMITH. n. f. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmoneseus, as the Grecian tale is,

Was a mad coppersmith of Elis;

Up at his forge by morning-peep. Swift.

COPPERWORM. n. f. [tered, in Latin.]

1. A little worm in ships.

2. A moth that fretteth garments.

3. A worm breeding in one's hand. Ainsworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing; copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring, and deposit, in lieu of the iron particles curried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward.

COPPICE. n. f. [copiceus, Fr. from copper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] Low woods cut at stated times for fuel; a place over-run with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was boarded both with high timber-trees, and coppis of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,

A band, where you may have the fairest shoot. Shakespeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave stables too thick, they will run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood.

Bacon's Henry VII.

The willows and the hazel coppis green,

Shall now no more be seen,

Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milton.

Rare trees in your kennels and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Martine.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coal-mines. Lect.

COPPLE-DUST. n. f. [probably for coppil, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or coppil-dust, by pounding into the quicksilver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conic form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppil. Woodward.

COPSE. n. f. [abbreviated from coppice.] Short wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood. The East quarters of the flaire are not destitute of copse woods. Carcu.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,

Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,

His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden.

TO COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of coppis wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift.

COPULA. n. f. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition; as, bohi are deer.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts.

TO COPULATE. v. a. [copula, Latin.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

TO COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons for copulating are infected, but also their children. Wijeman.

COPULATION. n. f. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unwholesome. Hobbes.

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions; as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Caesar conquered the Gauls and the Britons: neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts.

COPY. n. f. [copie, Fr. copie, low Latin. Quod cuiusdam scilicet copia est translating.] Translating much inclines, after his manner, to derive it from copio, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's field were left, we might

From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. D. Nham.

He slept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. Saunders.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for the copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books; as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hobbes.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference:

In bed he slept not, for my urging it;

At board he led not, for my urging it. Shakespeare.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Hobbes.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;

But in them nature's copy is not eternal. Shakespeare.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. f. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. f. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court-roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary in one point or other, almost

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semi-girders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.

CORD. n. f. [cord, Welsh; corda, Latin; corde, French.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twigs.

Such fawning rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cord in twain,

Too intricate to unloose

Shel let down by a cord through the window. Jos. ii. 5.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,

These numerous corde are through the body spread. Blackm.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the corde thereof be broken.

Isaiah, xxxiii. 20.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. f. [cord and maker.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. f. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

TO CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to clothe by a bandage.

CORDE-GIP. n. f. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

They fastened their ships to the ground, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage.

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping.

To the cordage glued

The sailor, and the pilot to the helm. Thomson's Winter.

CORDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

To climb celestial silvia's chamber-window. Shakespeare.

CORDELIER. n. f. A Franciscan friar; so named from the cord which serves him for a circlet.

And who to assist but a grave cordelier. Prior.

CORDIAL. n. f. [from cord, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

When with home cordials seek to appease

The inward languor of my wounded heart,

And then my body shall have shortly ease;

But such sweet cordials pass physicians art.

Comfort, like cordials after death, comes late.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,

The fearlest honour of your peaceful gown,

Are the most pleasing objects I can find,

Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind.

CORDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king

Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know

What is more cordial.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes poisonous.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among Christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial instructing of Christian life or renovation, where the foundation is duly laid.

With looks of cordial love,

Hang over her enamour'd.

CORDIALITY. n. f. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the ancients had any such respect of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

CORDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition, wholly unfuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, nor no miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with and receive it.

CORDEXER. n. f. [cordonnier, Fr.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers fables.

Nº XXXII.

CORDON. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet. Cavaliers.

CORDWAIN. n. f. [Cordwain, leather, from Cordoba in Spain.] Spanish leather.

Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd

In golden bulkins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

CORDWAINER. n. f. [Uncertain whether from Cordwain, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West India. Trevoux.] A shoemaker.

COR. n. f. [cor, French; cor, Latin.]

1. The heart.

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him

In my heart's cor; ay, in my heart of heart. Shakespeare.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the cor of the square he raised a tower of a furlong high.

Dig out the cor below the surface.

Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd cor, Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees, watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no cor or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a bowl or fore.

And cut the head; for, 'till the cor be found,

The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, French, pronounced cor.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself, for that he was in a cor of people whose affections he suspected.

CORTA CRUS. adj. [cortus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and corta crus concretions.

CORIANDE. n. f. [coriandrum, Latin.]

It hath a fibrous annual root; the lower leaves are broad, but the upper leaves are deeply cut into five segments; the petals of the flower are unequal, and shaped like an heart: the fruit is composed of two hemispherical, and sometimes spherical seeds.

Bird fast his cor'ky arms.
- CORMORANT. n. f. [from corvus, Fr. from corvus marinus, Lat.]
1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.
Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge. Shakspeare.
Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and
Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life
Sat like a cormorant. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden's Fables.
2. A glutton.
CORN. n. f. [from corn, Sax. kyrn, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonic dialects; as, in an old Runick rhyme,
Hagel er kalder gorn.
Hail is the coldest grain.]
1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.
Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone. John, xii. 25.
The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakspeare.
2. Grain yet unripe, standing in the held upon its stalk.
Why he was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare, King Lear.
Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe. Knight's History of the Turks.
- Still a murmur runs Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thomson's Autumn.
3. Grain in the ear, yet unthreshed.
Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a flock of corn cometh in his season. Job, v. 26.
4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its cornaceous or bony substance.
Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakspeare.
"He man that makes his toes,
What he his heart should make,
Shall of a corn cry woe."
And turn his sleep to wake. Shakspeare, King Lear.
Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do ingrieve either towards rain or towards frost. Bacon's Natural History.
The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis.
He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gash ring rain. Gay.
It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Boissac.
Thus Lamb, renowned for cutting corns,
An offer'd fee from Radcliff forns. Swift.
- TO CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Stim- mer observes, by the old Saxons.
2. To granulate.
- CORN-FIELD. n. f. A field where corn is growing.
It was a lover and his lass,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shakspeare.
You may soon enjoy the gallant fights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's corn-fields. Pope.
- CORN-FLAG. n. f. [from corn and flag.]
It hath a fleshy double tuberous root: the leaves are like those of the fleur-de-lys: the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a lily, open at the top, in two lips; the upper imbricated, the under divided into five segments: the ovary becomes an oblong fruit, divided into three cells, filled with roundish seeds wrapt up in a cover. Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white. It is a proper ornament for borders.
- CORN-FLOOR. n. f. The floor where corn is stored.
Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor. Hof. ix. 1.
- CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]
There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be sown, but only amongst corn; as the blue bottle, a kind of yellow margold, wild poppy, and fumitory. Bacon's Natural History.
Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them flower in Jane and July, and others in August. The seeds should be sown in March: they require a good soil. Forster.

CORN-LAND. n. f. [from corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.
Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn lands. Alcimeter's Husbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. f. [from corn and master.] One that cultivates corn for sale.
I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audium of any man in my time; a great grafter, a great sheep-master, a great timberman, a great collier, a great corn-master, and a great leadman. Bacon's Essays.

CORN-MARIGOLD. n. f. [from corn and marigold.]
It hath an annual root: the cup of the flower is hemispherical and scaly: the flowers are radiated; the rays being, for the most part, of a yellow flower, and the seeds are furrowed.
Miller.

CORN-MILL. n. f. [from corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.
Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large lumbers. Alcimeter.

CORN PIPE. n. f. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by joining the joint of a green stalk of corn.
Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,
To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms. Twiss.

CORN-RUCKET. n. f. [from corn and ruck.] Twiss.
The flower consists of four leaves, in form of a cross: the pointal becomes a four-cornered fruit, resembling a cross club, divided into four cells, in which are contained roundish seeds with a beak. This plant grows wild in the warm parts of France and Spain. Miller.

CORN-ROSE. n. f. See POPPY, of which it is a species.

CORN-SALAD. n. f. [from corn and salad.]
The leaves grow by pairs opposite on the branches, which are always divided into two parts, and appear at the top like an umbrella. The flower consists of one leaf, cut into many segments, and succeeded by one naked seed, having no down adhering to it, in which it differs from the valerian. Some sorts of it grow wild. Miller.
Corn-salad is an herb, whose top-leaves are a salad of themselves. Alcimeter's Husbandry.

CORNAGE. n. f. [from corn, Fr. corne, Lat.] A tenure which obliges the landholder to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

CORN-CHANDLER. n. f. [from corn and chandler.] One that trades in corn.

CORN-CUTTER. n. f. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession it is to cut corn from the foot.
The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh;
for there had been a corn-cutter who had cleared it. Warton.
I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician. Spenser.

CORNEEL. n. f. [from corn, Latin] See CORNELIAN.

CORNELIAN-TREE. n. f. CHERRY.
The Cornel tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat resembles.
The fruit is good in the kitchen and conservatory. Boissac.
It is very durable, and useful for wheelwork. Boissac.
Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elm-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter. Bacon's Natural History.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows
The malt and acorn, brutal food! and flows
The fruits of cornel, as they fall around. Pope's Epistle.

COR'NEL. n. f. [from corn, Latin.]

CORNELIAN-CHERRY. n. f. [from corn, Latin.]
The flower-cut consists of four small rigid leaves, expanded in form of a cross; from the center of which are produced many small yellowish flowers, consisting of four leaves, disposed in form of an umbrella: these flowers are succeeded by fruit, oblong or of a cylindrical form, somewhat like an olive, containing an hard stone, which is divided into two cells, each containing a single seed. The species are two, of which the cornelian-cherry, or male cornel tree, is very common, being propagated for its fruit, which, by many people, is preferred to make tart; it is also used in medicine as an astringent and cooler. There is likewise an official preparation of this fruit, called Res. ad. cornel. Dogberry, or geranium tree, is very common in hedges, and the fruit of this plant is often brought into the markets, and sold for buckthorn berries, but in this fruit is but one stone, and its root is much
The cornelian sort is a native of America; and is greatly commended used in England to make a tea, which is greatly commended by some against violent diseases. Most of the other sorts are brought from America, except what is commonly called the dwarf honeysuckle, which grows wild on the high mountains in the northern counties; but is with difficulty preserved in gardens. Miller.

On wildings and on strawberries they fed;

Prior.

CO'VOLLARY. n. f. [corollarium, Lat. from corolla; finis coronat opus; or from corollari, Fr. a surplus.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises, necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it.

Goverment of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself.

Lryden.

2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary,

Rather than want.

Shakspeare.

CORON'D. n. f. [Latin.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip.

Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble flew by their graceful projections.

Speclator.

CORONAL. n. f. [corona, Latin.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Bacchus with a coronal,

And hymen also crown with wreaths of vine.

Spenser.

CORONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal suture.

W. Jem.

CORONARY. adj. [coronarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots upon the crown.

Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries.

Boerhaave's Sermons.

CORONATION. n. f. [from corona, Latin.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.

Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,

To shew my duty in your coronation.

Shakspeare.

A cough, sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day.

Shakspeare.

Now emperors have had publick'd the renown

Of Shakspeare's coronation through the town.

Dryden.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In penive thought recal the fancy'd scene,

Pope.

See coronations rise on every green.

CORONER. n. f. [from corona.] An officer whose duty it is to enquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury of twelve persons is impanelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my uncle; for he's in the third degree of drink; he's drowned.

Shakspeare.

CORONET. n. f. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.] An inferior crown worn by the nobility.

The coronet of a duke is adorned with interlavery leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interwove; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl.

Sidney.

In his livery

Walk'd crowns and coronets, realms and islands were

As plates dropt from his pocket.

Shakspeare.

All the rest are countesses.

— Their coronets lay so.

Shakspeare.

Under

Under a coronet his flowing hair,
In curls, on either cheek play'd.
Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt.
Peers and duker, and all their swelling train,
And garrets, flats, and coronets appear.
CORPORAL. n. f. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corporal whisper'd in my ear,
Fivepounds, it rightly tip, would let me clear.
CORPORAL of a ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him.

CORPORAL. adj. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.]
1. Relating to a body; belonging to the body.

To relax of labors and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls, past corporeal toil,
A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied.
Render to me some corporeal sign about her,
More evident than this.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporeal eyes, exceeded the small proportion of my understanding.
They enjoy great sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporeal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts, which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind.
2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as a corporeal being; but otherwise corporeal. Corporeal is having a body; corporeal relating to the body. It his distinction seems not ancient.

Whether are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what fecm'd corporeal
Melted, as breath, into the wind.
And from these corporeal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit.

CORPORALITY. n. f. [from corporel.] The quality of being embodied.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporeality, then, of all other, the most feeble and pure.

CORPORALLY. adv. [from corporel.] Bodily.

The sun is corporally conjoined with baillifcus.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Latin.] United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, defacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons.

CORPORATES. n. f. [from corporate.] The state of a body corporate; a community.

CORPORATION. n. f. [from corpus, Latin.]

A corporation is a body politic, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successor, as a single man binds his executor or heir.

Of angels we are not content only what they are, and do, in regard of their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society or fellowship with men.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,
Which doth her corps from God and nature take;
Ten thousand men the doth together draw,
And of them all one corporate make.

CORPORATURE. n. f. [from corpus, Latin.] The state of a being embodied.

CORPUSAL. adj. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial. See CORPORAL.

The finitiveness of the circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That to corporeal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense.

The corse is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal prison freed.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye
On the young gnat, or new-engender'd fly.
2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporeal.
I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Ainsbury downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one.

CORPOREITY. n. f. [from corporeus, Latin.] Materiality; the quality of being embodied; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity which supposeth weight or gravity.

It is the faying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects and this lower corporeity.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure.

CORPORIFICATION. n. f. [from corporeify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

TO CORPORY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To embody; to insinuate into body.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is insinuated for the spirit of the world corporeified.

CORPUS. n. f. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.]

CORPSE. n. f. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.]

1. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this man, this vast unhide-bound corps.
He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That scorns his brittle corps, and seems ashamed
He's not all spirit.

2. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Nota friend greet
My poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown.
There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd.

See where the corps of thy dead form approaches.
The corps was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body.

3. A body of forces.

CORPULENCE. n. f. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.]

CORPULENCY. n. f. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.]

1. Bulkiness of body; stoutness; fullness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unworldliness,
And burdensome corpulence my love had grown.
It is but one species of corpulence; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people.

2. Spissitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tilt, the heaviness and corpulence of the water requiring a great force to divide it.

CORPULENT. adj. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.] Fleishy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We lay it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrasis and circuit of words; and when with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height.

CORPUSCULE. n. f. [corrupted from corpus, Latin.] A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies?

CORPUSCULAR. adj. [from corpusculum, Latin.] Relating to bodies; comprising bodies. It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical.

It may be said, that the modern corpuscularians tell, that most things, more intelligibly than the periphrastics.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion.

CORRACLE. See CORRICLE.

TO CORRADE. v. a. [corrupted from corradere, Latin.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIATION. n. f. [from corradere, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impulsion of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradation and conjunction of beams.

TO CORRECT. v. a. [corrupted from corrigere, Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of sinning.

After he has once been corrected for a lie, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him. Lact.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them, when they do amiss. Lact.

2. To amend; to take away faults, in writings or life.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Barnet.

Correcting nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.
I wist, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestic concerns; to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

As in habitual gout or stone,

The only thing that can be done,

Is to correct your drink and diet,

And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In cases of acidity, water, is the proper drink; its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal lubricants; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbutnot.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,

Which he presumes the most correct of his. Dryden.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome, where the sense and language is complete. Fulton.

CORRECTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,

Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shakespeare.

An offensive wife,

That hath enrag'd him on to foster strokes,

As he is striking, holds his infant up,

And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm

That was uprear'd to execution. Shakespeare.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and severity, to instruct us in virtue. Watts.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction. Dryden.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong. Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great facility, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discosity. Brown.

Our fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom the always gave good counsel, but often too gentle correction. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make courts hot, ambitious, wholesome, do not take a dram of country dulness; do not add Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Donne.

CORRECTOR. n. f. [from correctum.] One that has been in the house of correction; a jail-bird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare.

I will have you soundly swung for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished corrector! Shakespeare.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of the bilious acali. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CORRECTIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food. Key.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow. South.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment, which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explanation or adumbration thereof. Hale.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; appositely; exactly; without faults.

N° XXXII.

There are ladies, without knowing what corres and part ciples, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools. Lact.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow, Correctly cold, and regularly low. Pope.

CORRECTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air and posture, and the correctness of design in this statue, are inexpressible. Addison.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care, When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war. Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness. Swift.

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin? How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion. Sparr.

With all his faults he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his stile and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the fixitious salts prevent the grievous vellications of refinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes, whereby they sometimes occasion intolerable gripings; and as spices and carminative seeds also assist in the easier operation of some catharticks, by dissipating collections of wind.

In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector which destroys or diminishes a quality that it could not otherwise be dispensed with: thus turpentine are correctors of quicksilver, by destroying its fluidity, and making it a scale of mixture; and thus rectified spirit of wine breaks off the points of some acids, so as to make them become safe and good remedies, which before were destructive. Quincy.

TO CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate. South.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [con and relatus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another. South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other. South.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION. n. f. [corruptio, corruptum, Latin.] Oburgation; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must needs be talking of other peoples faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction and backbiting into admonition and fraternal correction. Greenwood of the Tongue.

TO CORRESPOND. v. n. [con and respondere, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time. Holder.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. n. f. [from correspond.]

CORRESPONDENCY. n. f. [from correspond.]

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the others more perfect direction. Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondence, and relations keep the same to one another. Lact.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my king-
King Charles.
doms.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence e
With the enemy, and thus they would betray us. Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.
Let such military perions be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state. Bacon.

CORRESPONDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant to the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep. Hosker.

And as five zones th' ethereal regions bind, Dryden.
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd.
CORRESPONDENT. n. f. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad. Denham.

CORRESPONSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,

And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts, Shakespeare.
Sprew up the sons of Troy.

CORRIDOR. n. f. [French.]

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long idle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other. Harri.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost intricately ruined. Addison.

CORRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Lat.]

1. That which may be altered or amended.

2. He who is a proper object of punishment; punishable. He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigit for such presumptuous language. Houel.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it sterile with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigit authority of this lies in our will. Shakespeare.

CORRIVAL. n. f. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governors commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other. Spenser.

He that doth redeem her thence, might wear

Without corrial all her dignities. Shakespeare.

CORRIVALRY. n. f. [from corrival.] Competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of hracelets fit to comfort the spirits, and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient. Bacon.

TO CORROBORATE. v. a. [con and robore, Lat.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by customs. Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it. Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgment. Watson.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby. Watts.

CORROBORATION. n. f. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better *corroborat*ion of the marriage. Bacon.

CORROBORATIVE. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix *corroborat*ives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried. Wileman.

TO CORRODE. v. a. [corrodo, Latin.] To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode

The bad with bad, a spider with a toad;
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will. Dover.
We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigraese, is wont to reduce it to a green blue solution. Boyl.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time. Hic.

Annibal the Pyreneans pass,

And steepy Alps, the mounds that nature cast,

And with corroding juices, as he went,

A passage through the living rock he rent. Dryden.

Fishes, which neither chew their meat nor grind it in their stomachs, do, by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus. Rey.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind. Arantius.

Through the heart,

Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,

'Tis then delightful misery no more,

But agony unmixt, incessant gall,

Corroding every thought, and blasting all

CORRODENT. adj. [from corrode.] Having the power of corroding or wasting any thing away.

CORRODIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed or corroded.

Metals, although corroddible by waters, yet will not suffer a ligation from the powerfullest heat communicable unto that element. Brown's Vn for Errors.

CORRODVS. n. f. [from corrodo, Latin.] A defalcation from an allowance or salary for some other than the original purpose.

In those days even noble persons, and other meaner men, ordered corrodies and pensions to their chaplains and servants out of churches. Aspi.

CORROSIBILITY. n. f. [from corrosibile.] The quality of being corrosible; possibility to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORROSIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORROSION. n. f. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid, or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstrooms here employed, have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or unious, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved; so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrooms, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Querc.

If there be any medicine that purgeth, and hath qualities of the first two manifest qualities, it is to be held (suspected) in a kind of poison; for that it worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature. Bacon.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Walslow.

CORROSIVE. adj. [from corrodo, Latin.] It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away. Gold, after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew.

The sacred fons of vengeance, on whose course Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year. Taylor.

2. Having the quality to fret or vex.

If the maintenance of ceremonies be a corrosive to such as oppugn them, undoubtedly to such as maintain them it can be no great pleasure, when they behold that which they reverence is oppugned.

CORROSIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the quality of wasting any thing away, in the flesh of an ulcer.

He meant his corrosives to apply,
And with strict diet tame his stubborn malady. Spenser.

2. That which has the power of fretting, or of giving pain. Such speeches favour not of God in him that with them and unto virtuously disposed minds they are grievous corrosives.

Hooker.

Away; though parting be a fretful corrosive,
It is applied to a deathful wound. Shakespeare.

Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,
For things that are not to be remedied. Shakespeare.

CORROSIVELY, adv. [from corrosive.]

1. Like a corrosive.

At first it tasted somewhat corrosively. Boyle.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying. Ephesians.

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire. Shakespeare.

These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupt ends,

Than twenty slyky ducking observants. Shakespeare.

Some, who have been corrupt in their morals, have yet been infinitely solicitous to have their children piously brought up. South's Sermons.

CORRUPTER, n. f. [from corrupt.] He that taints or vitiates; he that lessens purity or integrity.

What is here?

The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus,
All turn'd to here? Away, away,

Corrupters of my faith! Shakespeare.

From the vanity of the Greeks, the corrupters of all truth, who, without all ground of certainty, vaunt their antiquity, came the error first of all. Ralph.

Those great corrupters of Christianity, and indeed of natural religion, the Jesuits. Addison.

CORRUPTIBILITY, n. f. [from corruptible.] Possibility to be corrupted.

CORRUPTIBLE, adj. [from corrupt.]

1. Susceptible of destruction by natural decay, or without violence.

Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live, were it not that they are joined with his body, which is incorruptible, and that his is in ours as a cause of immortality. Hooker.

It is a devouring corruption of the essential mixture, which consisting chiefly of an oily moisture, is corruptible through dissipation. Harvey.

The several parts of which the world consists, being in their nature corruptible, it is more than probable, that, in an infinite duration, this frame of things would long since have been dissolved. Tillotson.

2. Susceptible of corruption; possible to be tainted or vitiated.

CORRUPTIBLENESS, n. f. [from corruptible.] Susceptibility of corruption.

CORRUPTIBLY, adv. [from corruptible.] In such a manner as to be corrupted, or vitiated.

CORRUPTION, n. f. [corruptio, Lat.]

1. The principle by which bodies tend to the separation of their parts.

2. Wickedness; perversion of principles; loss of integrity.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, which makes us averse to them, are so abstracted from ideas of sense, that they seldom get an opportunity for descriptions and images. Addison.

Amidst corruption, luxury and rage,
Still leave some ancient virtues to our age. Pope.

3. Putrefaction.

The wife contriver, on his end intent,

Careful this fatal error to prevent,

And keep the waters from corruption free,

Mix'd them with salt, and seal'd all the sea: Blackmore.

4. Matter or pus in a sore.

5. The means by which any thing is vitiated; depravation.

After my death I wish no other herald,

No other speaker of my living actions,

To keep mine honour from corruption.

But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shakespeare.

The region hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages, received new and differing names. Raleigh.

All those four kinds of corruption are very common in their language; for which reason the Greek tongue is become much altered. Brewster.

6. [In law.] An infection growing to a man attainted of felony or treason, and to his issue: for as he lieth all to the prince, or other lord of the fee, so his issue cannot be heir to him, or to any other ancestor, of whom they might have claimed by him; and if he were noble, or a gentleman, he and his children are made ignoble and ungentle, in respect of the father. Cowell.

CORRUPTIVE, adj. [from corrupt.] Having the quality of tainting or vitiating.

Not resembling themselves according to feminal condition, yet carrying a settled habitude unto the corruptive originals.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

As ever wielded spear in warlike hand. Spenser.

2. A dead body; a carcase; a poetical word.

That from her body, full of filthy sin,

He rest her hateful head, without remorse;

A stream of coal-black blood forth gush'd from her corse.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Set down the corse; or, by saint Paul,

I'll make a corse of him that disobey's. Shakespeare.

What may this mean?

That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,

Revisit'st thus the gumpies of the moon,

Making night hideous? Shakespeare.

Here lay him down, my friends,

Full in my sight, that I may view at leisure

The bloody corse, and count those glorious wounds. Addison.

You heard the groans,

Heard nightly plung'd, amid' the swollen waves,

The frequent corse. Thomson.

CORSELET.

CORSELET, n. f. [corselet, French.] A light armour for the forepart of the body.

Some shirts of mail, some coats of plate put on,
Some don'd a cuirace, some a corselet bright. Fairfax.
They lash, they foil, they pale, they strive to bore
Their corselets, and their thinnest parts explore. Dryden.

But heroes, who o'ercome or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which, in battle's heat,
Against their very corselets beat. Prior.

CORTICAL, adj. [cortex, bark, Lat.] Barky; belonging to the outer part; belonging to the rind; or outward.

Their last extremities form a little gland, (all these little glands together make the cortical part of the brain) terminating in two little vessels. Cheyne.

CORUSCATION, n. f. [coruscatio, Lat.] Flash; quick vibration of light.

We see that lightnings and coruscations, which are near at hand, yield no sound.

We may learn that sulphureous steams abound in the bowels of the earth, and ferment with minerals, and sometimes take fire with a sudden coruscation and explosion. Newton.

How heat and moisture mingle in a mass,
Or belch in thunder, or in lightning blaze;
Why nimble coruscations strike the eye,
And bold tornado's bluster in the sky. Garth.

CORYMBIATED, adj. [corymbus, Latin.] Garnished with branches of berries. Dict.

CORYMBIFEROUS, adv. [from corymbus and fero, Lat.] Bearing fruit or berries in bunches.

Corymbiferous plants are distinguished into such as have a radiate flower, as the sun-flower; and such as have a naked flower, as the hemip-agrimony, and mugwort: to which are added those a-kind hereunto, such as scabious, tansy, thistle, and the like. Quincy.

CORYMBUS, n. f. [Latin]

It in general signifies the top of any thing; but amongst the ancient botanists it was used to express the bunches or clusters of berries of ivy, or the like: amongst modern botanists it is used for a compounded discous flower, whose seeds are not pappous, or do not fly away in down; such are the flowers of daisies, and common marguldy; and therefore Mr. Ray makes one genus of plants to be such as have a compound discous flower, without any downy wings to carry off their seeds. Quincy.

COSCONOMANCY, n. f. [from coscos a sieve, and mantra, divination] The art of divination by means of a sieve. A very ancient practice mentioned by Theophrastus, and still used in some parts of England, to find out persons unknown. Chambers.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COSMOGRAPHY, n. f. [cosmos and grapho,] The science of the general system or affections of the world, distinct from geography, which delivers the situation and boundaries of particular countries.

Here it might see the world without travel; it being a lesser scheme of the creation, nature contracted, a little cosmography, or map of the universe. Shakspeare.

COSMOPOLITAN, n. f. [cosmos and politai,] A citizen of the world; one who is at home in every place.

COSSET, n. f. A lamb brought up without the dam.

If thou wilt bewail my woful teen,
I shall thee give yond cosset for thy pain. Spenser.

COST, n. f. [cost, Dutch.] As this word is found in the remotest Teutonic dialects, even in the Islandic, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin coste; though it is not unlikely that the French cosset comes from the Latin.

1. The price of any thing.

2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders. Shakspeare.

Let foreign princes vainly boast
The rude effects of pride and cost
Of vaster fabrics, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay. Milner.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy. Shakspeare.

I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,
To ransom home revolved Mortimer. Shakspeare.

We have eaten at all the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift? 2 Samuel.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!
Put poor nature to such cost?
O! twill undo our common mother,
To be at charge of such another. Cromwell.

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which mens mouths are open against the church, but their hands turn towards it. Shakspeare.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,
Should win his supper at our common cost. Dryden.

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent: what were his other visible cost? I know not; what his latent, is variously conjectured. Shakspeare.

4. Loss; fine; detriment.

What they had fondly wished, proved afterwards to their cost over true. Shakspeare.

To Cost, v. n. pret. cost; particip. cost. [causter, French.] To be bought for; to be had at a price.

The dagger and poison are always in readiness; but to bring the action to extremity, and then recover all, will require the art of a writer, and cost him many a pang. Dryden.

COSTAL, adj. [costa, Lat. a rib.] B-longing to the ribs.

Hereby are excluded all ectaccous and cartilaginous fishes, many pectinal, whose ribs are rectilinal; and many fishes, which have their ribs embowed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

1. A head.

Take him over the costard with the belt of thy sword. Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.

Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and, if our great patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard mongers, graiers, or sell ale. Brown.

COSTIVE, adj. [costipatus, Lat. costipis, Fr.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excretions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed, the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white. Brown.

While faster than his costive brain indites,
Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;
His case appears to me like honest Teague's,
When he was run away with by his legs. Prior.

2. Close; impermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the sea and heaven's influences. Mumsey.

COSTIVELY, adv.

Co'sTIVENESS. n. f. [from co'stive.] The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed.

Co'stiveness disperles malign putrid fumes out of the guts and melencholy into all parts of the body, occasioning head-aches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction. Harvey.

Co'stiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil. Locke.

Co'sTLINESS. n. f. [from co'stly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious co'stlines yet with cleanly sufficiency it entertained me. Sidney.

Not have the frugal sons of fortune any reason to object the co'stlines; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures. Glanville.

Co'sTLY. adj. [from co'st.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Co'stly thy habit as thy purse can buy, But not exspect in fancy; rich, not gaudy; For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare.

Leave for a while thy co'stly country-seat; And to be great indeed, forget The nauseous pleasures of the great. Dryden.

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most co'stly piece of work on the face of the earth, when completed. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The pin ought to be as thick as a rowling-pin, and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive. Wijeman.

COTTON. n. f. A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, cut into several segments almost to the bottom, and is of the expanded bell shape: from the center rises a pyramidal hollow tube, adorned and loaded with chievs: from the empalement shoots up the pointal, fixed like a nail in the bottom of the flower and of the tube, which is changed into a roundish fruit, divided into four or more feminal cells, gaping at the top, and inclosing seeds, covered over and wrapped within that soft ductile wool, commonly known by the name of cotton. The species are, 1. Hot or shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish feed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence, with a large quinqued vine leaf. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. It is sown upon tilled grounds in the spring of the year, and cut down and reaped in harvest, as corn with us. This cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown hulk or feed-vessel growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. It is brought from the islands, where the natives take great care of its culture. There are several sorts of cotton fold, which differ according to the countries from whence they come, and the various preparations made of them. The first is the cotton in the wool; that is, that which comes from the shell, from which only we take the feed: those come from Cyprus, Smyrna, &c. The second is the cotton in the yarn: the second and third sorts are also annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude, from which the inhabitants are annually furnished with great quantities of cotton. One of these trees has a purple and the other a yellow flower, which is the only difference between them. Miller.

Co'tTON. n. f. Cloth or stuff made of cotton.

To Co'tTON. v. n.

TO COUNTERPROVE. v. a. [from counter and prove.] To take off a design in black lead, or red chalk, by pulling it through the rolling-press with another piece of paper, both being moistened with a sponge.

Chambers.

TO COUNTERROLL. v. a. [counter and roll.] This is now generally written as it is spoken, control. To preserve the power of detecting frauds by a counter account.

COUNTERROLLMENT. n. f. [from counterroll.] A counter account; controlment.

This present manner of exercising of this office, hath so many testimonies, interchangeable warrants, and counter-remittances, whereof each, running through the hands, and resting in the power of so many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falsehood.

Bacon.

COUNTERSCARP. n. f. [from counter and scarp.] In fortification, is that side of the ditch which is next the camp, or properly the talus that supports the earth of the covert-way; although by this term is often understood the whole covert-way, with its parapet and glacis; and so it is to be understood when it is said the enemy lodged themselves on the counterscarp.

Harris.

TO COUNTERSIGN. v. a. [from counter and sign.] To sign an order or patent of a superior, in quality of secretary, to render the thing more authentic. Thus charters are signed by the king, and countersigned by a secretary of state, or lord chancellor.

Chambers.

COUNTERTENOR. n. f. [from counter and tenor.] One of the mean or middle parts of music; so called, as it were, opposite to the tenor.

Harris.

I am deaf for two months together: this deafness unqualifies me for all company, except a few friends with counter-tenor voices.

Swift.

COUNTERTIDE. n. f. [counter and tide.] Contrary tide; fluctuations of the water.

Such were our countertides at land, and so Prefacing of the fatal blow.

Dryden.

In your prodigious ebb and flow.

Dryden.

COUNTERTIME. n. f. [counter and time; contretemps, French.]

1. The defence or resistance of a horse, that intercepts his cadence, and the measure of his manege.

Farrier's Dict.

2. Defence; opposition.

Let cheerfulness on happy fortune wait,
And give not thus the countermin to fate.

Dryden.

COUNTERTURN. n. f. [counter and turn.]

The cataclasis, called by the Romans status, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you.

Dryden.

TO COUNTERVAILE. v. a. [contra and valeo, Latin.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

Shakespeare.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such mens authority is not lightly to be shaken off.

Hexter.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;

Whos' soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equal valour countervail'd.

Fairy Queen.

The outward streams, which defend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight, whereby the ascending side, in every one of these revolutions, does exceed the other; and though this may be effected by making the water-wheels larger, yet then the motion will be so slow, that the screw will not be able to supply the outward streams.

Walton.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the accounts, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniences that go along with it.

L'Estrange.

COUNTERVAILE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surly, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor counter-vail for the bitterness of the review, which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever.

Saunders.

COUNTERVIEW. n. f. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

Mean while, ere thus was sign'd and judg'd on earth,
Within the gates of hell fat sin and death,

Milton.

2. Contrast; a position in which two dissimilar things illustrate each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counter-view or contrast with that of the other company.

Swift.

TO COUNTERWORK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole:

That counterworks each folly and caprice;
That diaphanous th' effect of ev'ry vice.

Pope.

COUNTRESS. n. f. [countess, Lat. comitissa, French.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, the lady that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the dutchess of Norfolk.

Shakespeare.

— It is, and all the rest are countesses.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abington to have been so truly loved by you, while she was living; and is gratefully honoured after she was dead.

Dryden.

COUNTING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.] The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, 'till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags, cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them.

Locke.

COUNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Malcus tenders on thy lips:

O, were the sum of thee that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Shakespeare.

But oh, her mind, that Orcus which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes

Of former curses.

Dante.

By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,

We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood wretum.

Pope.

I see, I cry'd, his woes, a countless train;

I see his friends overwhelm'd beneath the main.

Pope.

The fiats which, fluning through the cheerful land
In countless numbers, blest Britannia sees.

Tenison.

COUNTRY. n. f. [contra, Fr. contra, low Latin, supposed to be contracted from contraria.]

1. A tract of land; a region.

Send out more horses, flicke the country round,
Hang those that talk of fear.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed.

Spenser.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country.

The place which any man inhabits.

The place of one's birth; the native soil.

The king set on foot a reformation in the ornaments and advantages of our country.

Spenser.

O, save my country, heav'n, shall be your last.

Pope.

3. The inhabitants of any region.

All the country, in a general voice,
Cry'd hate upon him; all their prayers and love

Were set on Hereford.

Shakespeare.

COUNTRY. adj. [This word is scarcely used but in composition.]

Rustick.

1. Ruffick; rural; villanck.

Cannot a country wench know, that having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, that the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal?

I never meant any other, than that Mr. Trot should confine himself to country dances. Spectator.

He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinite, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood. Locke.

Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the notions they apply this name to, are so odd that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man. Locke.

The low mechanicks of a country town do somewhat outdo him. Locke.

Come, we'll e'en to our country seat repair,
The native home of innocence and love. Norris.

2. Remote from cities or courts, and of an interest opposite to that of courts. Locke.

A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house. Locke.

3. Peculiar to a region or people. Locke.

She laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spake in her country language. 2 Macbeth.

4. Rude; ignorant; untaught. Locke.

We make a country man dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden.

COUNTRYMAN. n. f. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?
My countryman; but yet I know him not. Shakespeare.

Horace, great bard, so late ordain'd, arose;
And bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading profane,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addison.

2. A ruffick; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Grout.

3. A farmer; a husbandman. Locke.

A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Estrange.

COUNTRY. n. f. [from fr. comitatus, Lat.]

1. A shire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the better government thereof, and the more easy administration of justice; so that there is no part of the kingdom, but what lieth within some county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who, among other duties belonging to his office, puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that whereas all pleas, touching the life and the maiming of a man, called pleas of the crown, and ordinarily held in the king's name, and which cannot pass in the name of any other; the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, put out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself in other counties, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. Besides the above counties of both sorts, there are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court which the sheriff keeps every month within his charge, either by himself or his deputy. Of these counties, one with another, there are reckoned thirty-seven in England, besides twelve in Wales. Cutler.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties, As we will ours. Shakespeare.

He caught his death the last month's sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman and her fatherless children. Addison.

2. An earldom. Locke.

3. A count; a lord; now wholly obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris. Shakespeare.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same to his heirs as feodum fructu tenetis in feudum ad concomitum. Davies.

COUPÉE. n. f. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and when the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLET. n. f. [couple, fr. equa, Lat.]

N° XXXIII.

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-hand where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couple with her,
Than when I feel and see no further troll her. Shakespeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in couple; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace. Locke.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and your's, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ap. Barn.

A piece of chrysalis inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female. Locke.

So shall all the couple three,
Ever true in loving be. Shakespeare.

Oh I alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as Yon gracious couple do. Shakespeare.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bacon.

He said: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley.

To COUPLE. v. a. [couple, Latin.]

1. To chain together. Locke.

Huntman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
Leech Merriman, the poor cur is inobedient;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakespeare.

2. To join one to another. Locke.

What greater ills have the heav'n's in store,
To couple coming harms with sorrow past. Sidney.

And whosoever we wear, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable. Shakespeare.

Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one. Evans.

They behold your chaste conversation couple, led with fear. Peter iii. 2.

Their concernments were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have made them brothers. Swift.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is measuring syllables and coupling rhimes, when he should be mending his own soul, and securing his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock. Locke.

I shall rejoice to see you coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction. Sidney.

I am just going to assist with the archbishop, in degrading a parson who couple all our beggars, by which I shall make one happy man. Swift.

To COUPLE. v. n. To join in embraces. Locke.

The fountains of waters there being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon's Natural History.

Thou with thy lusty crew,
Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
And coupled with them, and begot a race. Milton.

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species, and waters, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species. Hale.

After this alliance,
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. f. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his business to marry couple and beggar to each other. Locke.

No couple beggar in the land,
E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

COUPLET. n. f. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhimes. Locke.

Then would they call away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I wish it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in fix,
It gives me such a jealous fit,
I cry, pox take him and his wit. Swift.

5 U

2. A

2. A pair; as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,
Ere that her golden couplets are disclosed,
His silence will sit drooping.

Shakespeare.

COURAGE, n. f. [courage, Fr. from cor Latin.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprise.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.

Shakespeare.

Their discipline
Now mingled with their courage.

Hope aims their courage: from their tow'rs they throw
Their darts with double force, and drive the foe.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in a uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes.

COURAGEOUS, adj. [from courage.] Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

His is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall flee away naked in that day.

Let us imitate the courageous example of St. Paul, who chose then to magnify his office when ill men conspired to lessen it.

COURAGEOUSLY, adv. [from courageous.] Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain,
the fields there being open and champagne: the earl courageously came down, and joined battle with him.

COURAGEOUSNESS, n. f. [from courageous.] Bravery; boldness; spirit; courage.

Nicanor hearing of the manliness and the courageousness that they had to fight for their country, durst not try the matter by the sword.

COURANT. } n. f. [courante, French.] See CORANT.

COURANTO. } n. f. [courante, French.] To bend; to bow; to stoop in supplication.

I'll like a maid the better, while I have a tooth in my head: why, he is able to lead her a courante.

Any thing that spreads quick, as a paper of news.

TO COUR, v. n. [courir, French.] To bend; to bow; to stoop in supplication.

In the fatnels of these purdy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,

Yea, cour and woo, for leave to do it good.

COURIER, n. f. [courier, French.] A messenger sent in haste;
an express; a runner.

I met a courier, one mine ancient friend.

This thing the wary bawls well perceiving, for more assurance, by speedy couriers advertised Solyma of the taking of Tauris, and of the enemy's purpose, requesting him with all speed to repair with his army to Tauris.

COURSE, n. f. [cours, Fr. curjus, Lat.]

1. Race; career.

And some the arms with sinewy force,
And some with swiftness in the course.

2. Passage from place to place; progress. To this may be referred the course of a river.

And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais.

A light, by which the Argive squadron steers
Their silent course to Ilium's well known shore.

3. Tilt; act of running in the lists.

But this hot knight was cooled with a fall, which, at the third course, he received of Phalantus.

4. Ground on which a race is run.

5. Track or line in which a ship sails, or any motion is performed.

6. Sail; means by which the course is performed.

To the course we have devised fludding-sails, sprit-sails, and top-sails.

7. Progress from one gradation to another.

And in the end meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters.

When the state of the controversy is plainly determined, it must not be altered by another disputant in the course of the disputation.

8. Order of succession; as, every one in his course.

If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

9. Stated and orderly method.

The duke cannot deny the course of law.

If God, by his revealed declaration, first gave rule to any man, he, that will claim by that title, must have the same positive grant of God for his succession; for, if it has not directed the course of its descent and conveyance, no body can succeed to this title of the first ruler.

10. Series of successive and methodical procedure.

The glands do resolve during her course of physick, and the continueth very well to this day.

11. The elements of an art exhibited and explained, in a methodical series. Hence our course of philosophy, anatomy, chemistry, and mathematics.

12. Conduct; manner of proceeding.

Grutus perceiving the danger he was in, began to doubt with himself what course were best for him to take.

That worthy deputy finding nothing but a common misery, took the best course he possibly could to establish a commonwealth in Ireland.

He placed commissioners there, who governed it only in a course of discretion, part martial, part civil.

Give willingly what I can take by force;
And know, obedience is your safest course.

But if a right course be taken with children, there will not be so much need of common rewards and punishments.

What course to take.

The senate observing how, in all contentions, they were forced to yield to the tribunes and people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to time.

13. Method of life; train of actions.

A woman of fo working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy fate took a good course; for otherwise it would have been terrible.

His addition was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports.

That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house and civil life forsook.

14. Natural bent; uncontrolled will.

It is best to leave nature to her course, who is the sovereign physician in most diseases.

So every servant took his course,
And, bad at first, they all grew worse.

15. Catamenia.

The like happens upon the stoppage of women's courses, which, if not suddenly looked to, sets them undoubtedly into a consumption, dropsy, or some other dangerous disease.

16. Orderly structure.

The tongue despoilth the whole body, and setteth on fire
the course of nature.

17. [In architecture.] A continued range of stones, level or of the same height, throughout the whole length of the building, and not interrupted by any aperture.

18. Series of consequences.

Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and power;
No mufe is proof against a golden show.

With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any fact, whose reasonings, interpretation and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me.

19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.

Worthy sir, thou bleed'st:
Thy exercise hath been too violent

For a second course of fight.

Then with a second course the tables load,
And with full chargers offer to the god.

You are not to wash your hands till after you have sent up your second course.

So quick retires each flying course, you'd frown
Sancho's dread dole and his wand was there.

20. Regularity; settled rule.

Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors.

21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course.

TO COURSE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hunt; to pursue.

The big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose

In piteous chafe.

The king is hunting the deer; I am coursing myself.

Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose

To be his purveyor.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.

It would be tried also in flying of hawks, or in coursing of a deer, or hart, with greyhounds.

I am continually starting hares for you to course: we were certainly certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits sh amour just where thine takes it up. Congress.

3. To put to speed; to force to run.

When they have an appetite

To ventry, let them not drink nor eat,
And couise them oft, and tire them in the heat. May.

75. COURSE. v. n. To run; to rove about.

Swift as quicksilver it couise through
The nat'ral gates and allies of the body. Shakespeare.

The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the flaccid warms it, and makes it couise from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakespeare.

She did couise o'er my exteriors, with such a greedy intension, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass. Shakespeare.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as flags, ran loose, and d'round his chair. Dryd.

All, at once
Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend
And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
All ether couising in a maze of light. Tomson.

- COURSER. n. f. [from couise; couiser, French.]

1. A swift horse; a war horse: a word not used in prose.

So, proudly pricketh on his couiser frons,
And Atin ay him prick: with spurs of shame and wrong. Shenley's Fai y Queen.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of coursers, born of heavenly breed;
Who from their nollin's breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire. Dryden.

The impatient courser pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of courting hares.

A leath is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound. Hammer.

- COURT. n. f. [from cour, Fr. court, Dut. cortis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; Epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. Isaiah xxvi. 13.

His care and exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court:
the politeness and civility with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one. Prior's Dedication.

A suppliant to your royal court I come. Pope.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference

That holds this present question in the court? Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought unto the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached, concerning Jehas and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state. Asterbury.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts:
a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little towers, or other embellishments upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall. Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the travesty must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him), for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken. Dryden.

4. A small opening inclosed with houses and paved with broad flores.

flores. Bacon.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their wisdom was to highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them. Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

Is any noise or soldier you perceive

Near to the wall, by some apparent sign

Let us have knowledge at the court of guard. Shakespeare.

The archbishop

Of Canterbury, accompanied with other

Learned and reverend fathers of his order,

Held a late court at Dunstable. Shakespeare.

I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf. Spectator.

8. The art of pleading; the art of insinuation.

Hath thou been never bale? Did love ne'er bend

Thy traitor virtue, to betray thy friend?

Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid. D-y-n.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness
In strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves. La-te.

I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing. Swift.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

75. COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;

Seem to fly it, it will pursue:

So court a mistress, the denies you;

Let her alone, she will court you. Ben. Jonson.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,

The neighbouring princes court her nuptial bed. Dryden.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love

To Marcia, whilst her father's life is in danger!

Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling vernal,

While she beholds the holy flame expiring. Addison.

E'en now, when silent corn is at its gain,

A thousand court you, though they court in vain. Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned. Locke.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPELAIN. n. f. [court and chaplain.] One who attends the king to celebrate the holy office.

The maids of honour have been fully convinced by a famous court-chaplain. Swift.

solemnly administered.

The judge took time to deliberate, and the next court-day

he spoke. Arbushnut.

- COURT-DRESSER. n. f. [court and dresser.] One that dresses the court, or persons of rank; a flatterer.

There are many ways of fallacy; such arts of giving colours, appearances and resemblances, by this court-dresser, fancy. Locke.

- COURT-FAVOUR. n. f. Favours or benefits bestowed by princes.

We part with the blessings of both worlds for pleasures, court-favours, and commissions; and at last, when we have fold ourselves to our lusts, we grow sick of our bargain. L'Estr.

- COURT-HAND. n. f. [court and hand.] The hand or manner of writing used in records and judicial proceedings.

He can make obligations, and write court-hand. Shaksp.

- COURT-LADY. n. f. [court and lady.] A lady conversant or employed in court.

The same study, long continued, is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes or fashion is to a court-lady. Locke.

- COURTEOUS. adj. [courtis, French.] Elegant of manners; polite; well-bred; full of acts of respect.

He hath deserved worthily of his country;

And this ascent is not by such easy degrees,

As those who have been supple and courteous to the people. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

They are one while courteous, civil, and obliging; but, within a small time after, are supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptions. South.

- COURTEOUSLY. adv. [from courteous.] Respectfully; civilly; complaisantly.

He thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed, yet he let them courteously pass. Wotton.

Whilst Christ was upon earth, he was not only easy of access, he did not only courteously receive all that addressed themselves to him, but also did not disdain himself to travel up and down the country. Calamy.

He arrived at the coast of Alcinoüs, who, being prevailed upon by the glory of his name, entertained him courteously.

Bremes's Notes on the Odyssey.

- COURTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from courteous.] Civility; complaisance.

COURTESAN. n. f. [cortisana, low Latin.] A woman of the COURTESAN. n. f. town; a prostitute; a strumpet.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtesan. Shakespeare.

With them there are no flews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay, they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things. Bacon.

The Corinthian is a column, lasciviously decked like a courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her. Wotton.

Charixus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her. Addison.

- COURTESY. n. f. [courtesia, Fr. cortesia, Ital.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house: It

It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy. Shakespeare.
Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers. Poa. hom.
He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.
Clarendon.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown. Dryden.
An act of civility or respect.

Fair fir, you spit on me last Wednesday;
You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies,
I'll lend you this much money. Shakespeare.
Repole you there, while I to the hard house Return, and force their scant courtesy. Shakespeare.

When I was last at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle. Shakespeare.
Sound all the lady instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth fume of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy. Shakespeare.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the full blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.
Some country girl, scarce to a courtesy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train. Dryden.
The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is, I endeavoured to make her look something Christian-like. Congreve.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others; as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritance, that is, a woman seized of land, and getteth a child of her that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith; yet, if he were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Angliæ, or by the courtesy of England. Cowell.
To COURTESY. v. n. [from the noun.]

If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly court's to each other. Prior.

COURTIER. n. f. [from court.]
One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.
He hath been a courtier, he treads.—
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one. Shakspeare.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state-affairs. Bacon.
The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of all his attendants.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What
Made thee, all honour'd honest Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rell, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the capital? Shakspeare.
There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard the third. not out of fear, but wildom. Suckling.

COURTINE. See CURTAIN.

COURTLIKE. adv. [from court and like] Elegant; polite.
Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Camden.

COURTLINESS. n. f. [from courtly.] Elegance of manners;
grace of mien; complaisance; civility.

COURTLY. adv. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the

He paid his courtship with the crowd,
As far as modest pride allow'd. Swift.

2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair objects of love,
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakspeare.
In tedious courtship we declare our pain,
And e're we kindness find, first meet disdain. Dryden.
Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's bo-liday suit. Addison.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university,
My modesty I give to soldiers bare;
My patience to a gambler's share. Dante.
COUSIN. n. f. [from cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Lat.] Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister.
Macbeth unfeard him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements.
—Oh, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman. Shakspeare.
Tybalt, my cousin! O, my brother's child!
Unhappy fight! alas, the blood is spill'd!
Of my dear kinsman. Shakspeare.
Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
And cousin german to great Priam's feed. Shakspeare.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

COW. n. f. [in the plural, anciently kine, or ken, now commonly cow; cu, Sax. ker, Dutch.] The female of the bull; the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bulls; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.
After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cow milk alone. Wifeman.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cow,
He sought himself some hospitable house:
Good Creton entertain'd his godlike guest. Dryden.

To COW. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd.—

—Accur'd be that tongue that tells me so;
For it hath cow'd my better part of man. Shakspeare.
By reason of their frequent revolts they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seem to have somewhat cow'd their spirits. Head.

For when men by their wives are cow'd,
Their horns of courage are underfoot. Hudibras.

your cow-house all night. Mortimer.

COW-LEECH. n. f. [from cow and leech.] One who professes to cure dilemper'd cows.

To COW-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farming and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country. Mortimer.

COW-WEED. n. f. [from cow and weed.] A species of chervil; which see.

COW-WHEAT. n. f. [from cow and wheat.]

The leaves of this plant grow opposite by pairs: the flower consists of one leaf; is of an anomalous figure, and divided into two lips, the uppermost of which has a spur, but the under one is intire: the fruit is round, and divided into two cells, containing seeds resembling grains of wheat. This plant is very common in woods, and shady places. Miller.
COWARD. n. f. [from coward, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltron; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.
Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Mafidorus to courage, though he had been born a coward. Shakspeare.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were belt take heed, next time you run away, how you look back. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.

What can enoble fots, and slaves, and cowards fly?
Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards. Pope.

Tremble ye not, Oh friends! and cowards fly, Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die! Pope.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.
Having more man than wit about me, I drew;
And ran'd the house with loud and coward cries. Shakspeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy,
And ill foreseen the present bliss destroy. Pope.

Co'wardice. n. f. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, fir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;
And with foul cowardice his carcase frame,
Whole living hands immortaliz'd his name. Fairy Queen.
Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroic valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton on Education.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame;
The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryden's Fables.
'His great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; fees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane. Rogers's Sermons.

Co'wardliness. n. f. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

Co'wardly. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian footlayer made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon's Natural History.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and give a cowardly silence in Christ's cause defiance, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. South's Sermons.

2. Mean; besetting a coward.

I do find it cowardly, and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakspeare, Julius Caesar.

Co'wardly. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vily.

He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Koeller.

Co'wardship. n. f. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness: a word not now in use.

A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare; his honesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

To Co'ward. v. n. [currian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, and then he cowers down, and the pail be pressed down with him. Bacon's Natural History.

The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash mix with their ragged sides. Shakspeare.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld,
Approaching two and two: these cower'd low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

Our dame fits cower'd o'er a kitchen fire;
I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire. Dryden.

Cowism. adj. [from To cower, to awe.] Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Co'wkeeper. n. f. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd, are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Brown's Note on the Odyssey.

COWL. n. f. [cugle, Saxon; cucullus, Latin.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his friery cowl in a cornfield. Canden.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?
I'll tell you, friend, a wife man and a fool. Pope.

2. A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

Cowl-staff. n. f. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tolling him something high)
He apprehended to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster. Hjsemare.

Co'wslip. n. f. [cui-lippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of PRIMROSE, which see. Miller.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee sucks, there fuck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakspeare, Tempest.

N° XXXIII.

COWS-LUNGWORT. n. f. See MULLEN, of which it is a species. Miller.

Co'xcomb. n. f. [cuck and comb, corrupted from cuck's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the cels, when she put them 't the patty alive; he rapt them o' th' coxcombs with a flick, and cried, down, wantons, down. Shakspeare, King Lear.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licentious fools wore formerly in their caps.

There take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shakspeare.

3. A top; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have 't th' wind,
Tukens and letters, which she did defend. Shakspeare.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly,
Quarter of council from a foe. Hudibras.

It is a vanity common in the world, for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party fill with his better. L'Estrange's Fables.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name. Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made a coxcomb, nature meant but fools. Pope.

COXCOMICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

COY. adj. [ris, French; from quietus, Latin.]

1. Modest; decent.

Jacon is as coy as a maid;
He looked piteously, but nought he said. Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass,
A foe of folly and immodest toy;
Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Spenser.

Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy;
Like Daphne she, as lovely and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon. Pope.

To Coy. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again!
No more; but make me happy to my gulf,
That is, without your struggling. Dryden's King Arthur.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.—
—Thus to coy it!

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

With one who knows you too! Ross's Jane Shore.

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home. Shakspeare.

Co'v'ly. adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This said; his hand he coyly snatched away
From forth Antinous' hand. Chapman's Odyssey.

Co'yness. n. f. [from coy.] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water; three or four male carps will follow a female; and she putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags. Waller.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign,
And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

Co'y'stel. n. f. A species of degenerate hawk.

One they might trust, their common wrongs to wreak:
The mulquet and the coy'stel were too weak,
Too fierce the falcon. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

Coz. n. f. A cant or familiar word, contracted from cousin.

Be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow. Shak.

To Co'ZEN. v. n. [Yezzen is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chip or change; whence cozen, to cheat, because in such traffic there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so feilly, let the muster-master view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Goring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and then expose him to publick mirth for having been cozen'd. Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it. L'Estrange's Fables.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being covered by the fiction.

Dryden.

What if I please to lengthen out his date

A day, and take a pride to cozen fate. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport.

Locke on Education.

COZENAGE. n. f. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage, and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument.

Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,

It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago

Lik'd certain colours mingl'd so to do,

That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Glasville.

Stran-e cozenage! none would live past years again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;

And from the dregs of life, think to receive

What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryden.

But all these are trifles, if we confider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Sw ft.

COZENER. n. f. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, fir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

CRAB. n. f. [craabha, Sax. krabbi, Dutch.]

1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that call their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hudmanned or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they scale off and crumble away by degrees. Bacon.

The fox catches a crab fish with his tail, which Olaus Magnus faith he himself was an eye-witness of. Derham.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble flock

Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakspeare.

Fetch me a dozen crab-tree flaves, and strong ones: these are but twice as.

Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,

Shakspeare.

Imagine you see him laid forth, newly slain, upon a bier of crab-tree and oaken rods. Packham on Drawing.

CRAB. adj. It is used by way of contempt for any four or degenerate fruit; as, a crab cherry, a crab plum.

Better gleanings their worn foil can boast,

Than the crab vintage of the neighbouring coast. Dryden.

CRABBED. adj. [from crab.]

1. Peevish; morose; cynical; four.

A man of years, yet fresh, as mote appear,

Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,

That him full of melancholy did shew. Fairy Queen.

O, she is

Ten times more gentle, than her father's crabbed;

And he's compos'd of harshness. Shakspeare, Tempest.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when

Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,

'Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,

And clepe thyself my love. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

How charming is divine philosophy!

Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,

But musical as is Apollo's lute,

And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,

Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton.

Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed. Dryden.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,

And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;

Whate'er the crabbed author hath,

He understood by implicit faith. Hudibras.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius,

Are again'd gods, you know, and teach us,

The god makes not the poet. Prior.

CRABBEDLY. adv. [from crabbed.] Peevishly.

Watson's Aqva.

CRABS-EYES. n. f. They are whitish bodies, from the bigness of a pea to that of the largest horse-bean, rounded on one side and depressed on the other, heavily, moderately hard, and without smell. They are not the eyes of any creature, nor do they belong to the crab; but are produced by the common crawfish:

the large sea crawfish also affords them; and the stones are laid in two separate bags, one on each side of the stomach. In July, and part of June and August, when the creature calls in shell, the stones are not found in their places. We have them from Holland, Mulcovy, Poland, Denmark, Sweden, and many other places. They are alkaline, absorbent, and in some degree diuretick. Hill's Materia Medica.

Several persons had, in vain, endeavour'd to store themselves with crabs-eyes.

2. To break; to split.

O, madam, my heart is crack'd; it's crack'd. Shakspeare.

Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast half-eyes. Shakspeare.

Should some wild fig-tree take her native bent,

And heave below the gaudy monument,

Would crack the marble tiles, and disperse

The characters of all the lying verse. Dryden.

Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings

Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Dryden.

Honour is like that glassy bubble,

That finds philosophers such trouble;

Whole least part crack'd, the whole does fly,

And wits are crack'd to find out why. Hudibras.

3. To do any thing with quickness or smartness.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;

He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

4. To break or destroy any thing.

You'll crack a quart together! Ha, will you not? Shakspeare.

Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond crack'd 'twixt son and father. Shakspeare, King Lear.

5. To craze; to weaken the intellect.

I was ever of opinion, that the philosophers stone, and an holy war, were but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wore their feather in their heads. Bacon's Holy War.

He thought none poets till their brains were crack'd. Ridg.

7. CRACK. v. n.

 To celebrate some faburri trull,
 His smiles in order let,
 And ev'ry crambo he could get. Swift.

CRAMP. n. f. [crampe, Dut. crampes, French.]
 1. A spasm or contraction of the limbs, generally removed by warmth and rubbing.

For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramp,
 Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up. Shakspeare.
 In a retreat, he outruns any lacquey; marry, in coming on,
 he has the cramp. Shakspeare.

The cramp, no doubt, cometh of contraction of sinews;
 which is manifest, in that it cometh either by cold or dryness.
Bacon's Natural History.

Hares, said to live on hemlock, do not make good the tradition; and he that observes what vertiges, cramps, and convulsions follow thereon, in these animals, will be of our belief. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A restriction; a confinement; obstruction; shackle.
 A narrow fortune is a cramp to a great mind, and lays a man under incapacities of serving his friend. L'Estrange.

3. A piece of iron bent at each end, by which two bodies are held together.

To the uppermost of these there should be fastened a sharp grapple, or cramp of iron, which may be apt to take hold of any place where it lights. Hilkins.

CRAMP. adj. Difficult; knotty; a low term.
 To CRAMP. v. a. [from cramp.]

CRANIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The skull.

In wounds made by contusion, when the cranium is a little naked, you ought not presently to croud in doils; for if that contused flesh be well digested, the bone will incur with the wound without much difficulty. Wijeman.

CRANK. n. f. [This word is perhaps a contraction of crane- mch, to which it may bear some resemblance, and is part of the instrument called a crank.]

1. A crank is the end of an iron axis turned square down, and again turned square to the first turning down, so that, on the last turning down, a leather thong is drawn to stretch the treadle wheel about. Milton's Mech. Exercit.

2. Any bending or winding passage.

I send it through the rivers of your blood,
 Even to the court, the heart; to th' seat of th' brain;
 And, through the cranks and offices of man,
 The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
 From me receive that natural competency,
 Whereby they live. Shakspeare.

3. Any conceit formed by twisting or changing, in any manner, the form or meaning of a word.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
 Jest and youthful jollity,
 Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
 Nods and becks, and wretched smiles,
 Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
 And love to live in simple reck. Milton.

CRANK. adj. [from crank, Dutch, Skinner.]

1. Healthy; sprightly: sometimes corrupted to cranky.

They looked bigger, as bulls that been bated,
 And bearen the cragg so stiff and so fast,
 As cockle, on his dunghill crowing cranks. Spenser.

2. Among sailors, a ship is said to be cranky, when, by the form of its bottom, or by being loaded too much above, it is liable to be overet. [from crank, Dut. fick.]

To CRA'NKLE. v. n. [from crank.] To run in and out; to run in flexures and windings.

CRANKIED. adj. [from cranny.] Full of chinks.

A wall it is, as I would have you think,

That had in it a cranked hole or chink.

Shakespeare.

A very fair fruit, and not unlike a citron; but somewhat rougher chopt and cranked, vulgarly conceived the marks of Adam's teeth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CRANNY. n. f. [cræn, Fr. crana, Latin.] A chink; a cleft; a fissure.

The eye of the understanding is like the eye of the fence; for as you may see great objects through small crannies or holes, so you may see great axioms of nature through small and comprehensible instances.

Bacon's Natural History.

And therefore beat, and laid about,

Hudibras.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, but with brick or stone, fitted to the crannies.

*Dryden's Dedication to the Amid.*

Within the soaking of water and springs, with streams and currents in the veins and crannies.

Burnet.

He slipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garrets, and he peeped into every cranny.

Abbott's History of J. Bull.

CRAPE. n. f. [craps, low Latin.] A thin fluff, loosely woven, of which the dress of the clergy is sometimes made.

And proud Roxana, frid with jealous rage,

With fifty yards of craps shall sweep the stage.

Swift.

Not thou, lord Arthur, shalt escape:

To thee I often call'd in vain,

Against that assid in craps;

Yet thou could'st tamely see me slain.

Swift.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn;

A faint in craps is twice a faint in lawn.

Pope.

To crash, says Hannery, is to be merry: a crash being a word still used in some counties for a merry bout.

It is surely better to read crack. See CRACK.

CRASH. n. f. [from the verb.] A loud sudden mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Seneca's Ilium.

Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top

Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash,

Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Moralizing fast by the hazard-table: I look'd upon the uncertainty of riches, the decay of beauty, and the crash of worlds with as much contempt as ever Plato did.

Pope.

CRASSIS. n. f. [crasis.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The fancies of men are so immediately diversified by the individual crasis, that every man owns something wherein none is like him.

Glanville.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger, as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crasis, and constitution of the blood and spirits.

South's Sermon.

CRASS. adj. [crassus, Latin.] Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crasses and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it.

CRASSITUD. n. f. [crassitudo, Latin.] Grossness; coarseness; thicknes.

They must be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper or parchment; for if they have a greater crassitudo, they will alter in their own body, though they spend not.

Bacon.

The dead leaf, which vomiteth up bitumens, is of that crassitudo, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been born up, and not sunk.

Bacon.

The terrestrial matter, carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained thereby partly by the greater crassitudo and gravity of the sea-water, and partly by its constant agitation.

Woodward.

CRASSINATION. n. f. [from crassus, Latin, to-morrow.] Delay.

Dicit.

CRATCH. n. f. [cratch, French; crates, Latin.] The palisaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

The restrictives were applied, one over another, to her throat: then we put her on a cravat.

Weyman's Surgery.

TO CRAVE. v. a. [crapan, Saxon.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole Itany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands?

Holier.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;
But for the mutable rank-scented many,
Let them regard me as I do not flatter.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

The poor people not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed.

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend the forbearance too of any action propoed.

Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,
Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves.

Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd; the more their princes gave,
Th' advantage only took the more to crave.

Dentham.

Is ever craving, and will still be poor?
Who cheats for halfpence; and who doffs his coat,

To have a farthing in a ferry-boat.

Dryden's Persius.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes to us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety.

L'Estr.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it, by some wicked action.

South's Sermons.

4. To call for importantly.

Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our business,

Shakespeare, King Lear.

Which crave the infant only.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution, are acids, taken in too great quantities; four crustations, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances.

Abbotson on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,
But more would prove
This heart too little, that too great.

Sutcliff.

CRAVEN. n. f. [derived by Stanes from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.]

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a cockcomb? —
—A combed cock, so Kate will be my hen,
—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.

Shakespeare.

2. A coward; a recreant.

Upon his coward breast
A bloody cross, and on his craven crest
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly.

Spenser.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath? —
—He is a craven and a villain else.

Shakespeare, Henry V.

Whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;

A thought, which quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find
From cowardice, not ruth did that proceed;

His noble foes durst not his craven kind
Exasperate by such a bloody deed.

Fairfax.

TO CRAVEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divin',
That craven my weak hand.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

CRAVER. n. f. [from crave.] A weak-hearted spiritless fellow. It is used in Clarissa.

TO CRAWCH. v. a. [schranzen, Dutch; whence the vulgar say more properly to schranck.] To crush in the mouth. The word is used by Swift.

CRAW. n. f. [kræ, Danish.] The crop or first stomach of birds.

5 Y In

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, or at least into a kind of ante-stomach, which I have observed in many, especially piscivorous birds.

Ray on the Creation.

CRAWFISH. n. f. [sometimes written crayfish, properly crayce; in French crayfish.] A small crustaceous fish found in brooks; the small lobster of fresh water.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hommandor or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

Let me to crack live crawfish recommend. Pope.

The common crawfish, and the large crayfish, both produce the stones called crab-eyes. In part of June, in July, and part of August, this animal not only calls its shell, but its very stomach is also consumed and digested, by a new one growing in its place.

Hist. on the Materia Medica.

TO CRAWL. v. n. [triden, Dutch.]

1. To creep; to move with a slow motion; to move without rising from the ground, as a worm.

That crawling insect, who from mud began;

Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Dryden.

The streams but just contain'd within their bounds,

By slow degrees into their channels crawl;

And earth increases as the waters fall. Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another. Crew.

The vile worm, that yesterday began

To crawl; thy fellow-creature, abject man! Prior.

2. To move weakly and slowly.

'Tis our first intent

To shake all cares and business from our age,

While we unburthen'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakespeare.

They like tall fellows crept out of the holes, and feebly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Knellet.

A look to pale no quartane ever gave;

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave. Dryden.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business. Atterbury's Hist. of J. Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,

Vile reptile, weak and vain!

A while he crawls upon the earth,

Then shrinks to earth again. Swift.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time.

Swift.

2. To move about hated and despised.

Cramer.

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,

And is his oracle. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Reflect upon that litter of absurd opinions that crawl about the world, to the disgrace of reason. South's Sermons.

How will the condemned finner then crawl forth, and appear in his filth and shame, before that undefiled tribunal?

South's Sermons.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace

Has made the father of a nameless race,

Crawl through the street, shov'd on, or rudely prest'd

By his own sons, that pass him by unblest! Pope.

CRAWLER. n. f. [from crawl.] A creeper; any thing that creeps.

Dryden's Dufresny.

CRA'YFISH. n. f. [See CRAWFISH.] The river lobster.

The cure of the meuricatic and armoniack faltness requires to use stumpy meats; as snails, tortoises, jellies, and crayfishes.

Flager on the Humours.

CRA'YON. n. f. [crayon, French.]

1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line; that is to say, without working, without giving fume strokes of the pencil or the crayon.

Dryden's Dufresny.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon.

TO CRAZE. v. a. [cras, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.

In this consideration the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of Popish parents, does seem cras'd. Hook.

Relent, sweet Hennaia; and, Lyfander, yield

Thy cras'd title to my certain right. Shakespeare.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,

God looking forth, will trouble all his host,

And crase their chariot-wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crasing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruisheth it to a fine sand.

Caracci's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,

No father his son dearer: true, to tell thee,

That grief hath cras'd my wits. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every finner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is cras'd and out of his wits, only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does.

Tillotson.

CRA'ZEDNESS. n. f. [from cras'd.] Decrepidude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the cras'dness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontent at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them.

Hosier, Preface.

CRA'ZINESS. n. f. [from cras.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, they may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the crasiness of her title to many of them. Howell's Paul Fugit.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [cras, French.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,

We will bestow you in some better place;

Fitter for sickness and for cras age. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

When people are cras, and in disorder, it is natural for them to grow.

L'Estrange.

2. Broken witted; shattered in the intellect.

The queen of night, whose large command

Rules all the sea and half the land,

And over moist and cras brains,

In high spring-tides, at midnight reigns. Hudibras.

3. Weak; feeble; shattered.

Phylick can but mend our cras state,

Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden's Fables.

Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a cras constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered. Wate.

CRAUGHT. n. f. [an Irish word.]

In these fast places they kept their craghts, or herds of cattle, living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage.

Deviet on Ireland.

TO CREAK. v. n. [corrupt from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. Shakespeare. King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep;

On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

'Tis the creaking locust with my voice conspire,

They fry'd with heat, and I with fierce desire. Dryden.

CREAM. n. f. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,

Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,

'Tis that can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakespeare.

I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream. Shakespeare.

Cream is matured and made to rise more speedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey.

Bacon's Natural History.

How the drudging goblin sweats,

To earn his cream-bowl duly fet;

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,

His shadowy flail hath thrif'd the corn. Milton.

Let your various creams incircled be

With swelling fruits, just ravish'd from the tree. King.

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream, and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor called skimmed milk. Atterbury on Diamonds.

2. It is used for the best part of any thing; as, the cream of a jest.

TO CREAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather cream.

There are a sort of men, whose villages

Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;

And do a wilful stiffness entertain,

With purpose to be drest in an opinion

Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shakespeare.

TO CREAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To skim off the cream.

2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing; so used somewhere by Swift.

CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and fac'd.] Pale; coward-looking.

fattened to a hawk's leath when the is first lured.

CREASE. n. f. [from cras, Latin, chalk. Steiner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Balingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp penknife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. Swift.

TO CREASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

TO CREA'TE. v. a. [creo, Latin.]

1. To

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.

Gen. i. 1.

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of.

Locke.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland Would create soldiers, and make women fight, To doff their dire distresses.

Shakespeare.

His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies.

King Charles.

They eclipse the clearest truths, by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could mislead his way to heaven for want of light.

Deacy of Pity.

None knew, 'till guilt created fear,

What darts or poison d'arrows were.

Reformation.

Must I new bars to my own joy create?

Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate?

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron.

Davies on Ireland.

CREATION. n. f. [from create.]

1. The act of creating or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his condescension of us.

Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character; as, the creation of peers.

3. The thing created; the universe.

As subjects then, the whole creation came;

And from their natures Adam then did name.

Danham.

Such was the faint, who shone with every grace,

Reflecting, Moses like, his master's face:

God saw his image lively was express'd,

And his own work as his creation blest.

Dryden.

Nor could the tender new creation bear

Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year.

Dryden.

In days of yore, no matter where or when,

Before the low creation swarm'd with men,

Parrel.

4. Anything produced, or caused.

Art thou not, fatal victim, sensible

To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but

A dagger of the mind, a false creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

Shakespeare.

CREATIVE. adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.

2. Exerting the act of creation.

To trace the outgoing of the ancient of days in the first influence, and of this creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry.

South's Sermons.

But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,

Of all his works, creative beauty burns

With warlike beam.

Thomson's Spring.

CREATOR. n. f. [creator, Latin.] The being that bestows existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in

The great creator, from his work return'd

Magnificent; his six days work, a world.

Milton.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a stout prayer,

Commit yourself into the hands of your faithful creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying.

Taylor.

CREATURE. n. f. [creatura, low Latin.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the Creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures.

Stillingfleet.

God's brilliant creatures were light.

Racine.

Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be.

Tillotson.

3. An animal not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only

In killing creatures, wits, as cats and dogs.

Shakespeare.

4. A general term for men.

Yet come in her could never creatures find;

But for his love, and for her own self sake,

She wander'd had from one to other land.

Fairy Queen.

Most cursed of all creatures under sky,

Lo Tantalus, I here torment'd lye

Fairy Queen.

'Tough he might burst his lungs to call for help,

No creature would assist or pity him.

Reformation.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creature, get you home;

Is this a holiday?

See a separate.

He would into the flocks,

And from the common creatures pluck a glove,

And wear it as a favour.

Shakespeare.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,

Have, by the very cunning of the scene,

Been struck to the soul, that presently

They have proclaim'd their macula'tions.

Shakespeare.

Nor think to-night of thy ill-nature,

But of thy follies, idle creature.

Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame.

Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, fir, would he gripe and wring my hand;

Cry, O! sweet creature, and then kiss me hard;

Ah, cruel creature whom dost thou dispute?

Shakespeare.

The gods, to live in woods, have left the flocks;

Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them palld upon little tables.

Watts.

the ancients; or comment, critick, and flourish upon them. Temple.

CRITICAL. adj. [from critick.]

1. Exact; nicely judicious; accurate; diligent.

It is submitted to the judgment of more critical ears, to direct and determine what is graceful and what is not. Holder.
Virgil was so critical in the rites of religion, that he would never have brought in such prayers as these, if they had not been agreeable to the Roman customs. Stillingfleet.

2. Relating to criticism; as, he wrote a critical dissertation on the last play.

3. Captious; inclined to find fault.

What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?—
—O, gentle lady, do not put me to't;
For I am nothing, if not critical. Shakespeare.

4. [from crisis.] Comprising the time at which a great event is determined.

The moon is supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decretory days to be dependent on that number.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Opportunity is in respect to time, in some sense, as time is in respect to eternity: it is the small moment, the exact point, the critical minute, in which every good work so much depends. Spratt.

The people cannot but resent to see their apprehensions of the power of France, in so critical a juncture, wholly laid aside. Swift.

CRITICALLY. adv. [from critical.] In a critical manner; exactly; curiously.

Difficult it is to understand the purity of English, and critically to discern good writers from bad, and a proper style from a corrupt one. Dryden.

These shells which are digged up out of the earth, several hundreds of which I now keep by me, have been nicely and critically examined by very many learned men. Woodward.

CRITICALNESS. n. f. [from critical.] Exactness; accuracy; nicety.

76 CRITICISE. v. n. [from critick.]

1. To play the critick; to judge; to write remarks upon any performance of literature; to point out faults and beauties.

They who can criticise so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write feverely with more ease than I can gently. Dryden.

Know well each ancient's proper character;

Without all this at once before your eyes, Pope.

Cavil you may, but never criticise.

2. To animadvert upon as faulty.

Nor would I have his father look so narrowly into these ac-

CROCODILE. n. f. [from κροκώ, saffron, and δῖλος, fearing.]

An amphibious voracious animal, in shape resembling a lizard, and found in Egypt and the Indies. It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty, be pierced; except under the belly, where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with several rows of teeth, sharp and separated, which enter one another. Though its four legs are very short, it runs with great swiftness; but does not easily turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to its death; but this is not probable. Some are fifteen or eighteen cubits long. Its sight is very piercing upon the ground, but in the water it sees but dimly; and it is said to spend the four winter months under water. When its bowels are taken out, or it is wounded, it smells very agreeably. Crucodiles lay their eggs, resembling goose-eggs, sometimes amounting to sixty, on the sand near the water-side, covering them with the sand, that the heat of the sun may contribute to hatch them. The Ichneumon, or Indian rat, which is as large as a tame cat, is said to break the crucodile's eggs whenever it finds them; and also, that it gets into the very belly of this creature, while it is asleep with its throat open, gnaws its entrails, and kills it. Calmet.

CROCODILINE. adj. [crucodilinus, Lat.] Like a crocodile. Dict.

CROCUS. n. f.

- When any great evil has been upon philosophers, they certainly sigh and groan as pitifully, and cry out as loud, as any other men. Tulius.
7. To squall, as an infant. Should some god tell me, that should I be born, And cry again, his offer I should scorn. Denham.
- Thus, in a flary night, fond children cry For the rich fangles that adorn the sky. Waller.
- He struggles for breath, and cries for aid; Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid. Dryden.
- The child certainly knows that the worme'd or multiseed it refuses, is not the apple or sugar it cries for. Locke.
8. To weep; to shed tears. Her who still weeps with spungy eyes, And her who is dry cork, and never cries. Dennis.
9. To utter an inarticulate voice, as an animal. He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young cries which cry. Psalm.
- The beasts of the field cry also unto thee. Isaiah.
10. To yell, as a hound on a scent. Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord; He cried upon it at the meerest lofs; Trust me, I take him for the better dog. Shakespeare.
- TO CRY. v. a. To proclaim publickly something lost or found, in order to its recovery or restitution. She seeks, she sighs, but nowhere spies him: Love is loft, and thus the cries him. Crofton.
- TO CRY DOWN. v. a.
1. To blame; to depreciate; to decry. Bavius cries down an admirable treatise of philosophy, and says there's atheism in it. Waller.
- Men of dissolute lives cry down religion, because they would not be under the restraints of it. Tillotson.
2. To prohibit. By all means cry down that unworthy course of late times, that they should pay money. Bacon.
3. To overbear. I'll to the king, And from a mouth of honour cry down This Ipswich fellow's insolence. Shakespeare.
- TO CRY OUT. v. n.
1. To exclaim; to scream; to clamour. They make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty. Isaiah.
- With that Sufanna cried with a loud voice, and the two elders cried out against her. Sufanna.
2. To complain loudly. We are ready to cry out of an unequal management, and to blame the Divine administration. Atterbury.
3. To blame; to censure: with of, against, upon. Are these things then necessities? Then let us meet them like necessities; And that same word even now cries out on us. Shakespeare.
- Will then cry out of Marcus: oh, if he Had borne the business. Shakespeare.
- Behold, I cried out of wrong, but I am not heard. Isaiah.

Cry out upon the stars for doing

Ill offices, to cross their wooing.

4. To declare loud.

5. To be in labour.

What! is the crying out?

— So said her woman; and that her suff'rance made

Each pang a death.

To CRY up. v. a.

1. To applaud; to exalt; to praise.

Instead of crying up all things which are brought from beyond sea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom.

The philosopher deservedly suspected himself of vanity, when cried up by the multitude.

The astrologer, if his predictions come to pass, is cried up to the stars from whence he pretends to draw them.

They flight the strongest arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones against it.

He may, out of interest, as well as conviction, cry up that for sacred, which, if once trampled on and profaned, he himself cannot be safe, nor secure.

Poets, like monarchs on an Eastern throne,

Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,

Here can cry up, and there as boldly blame,

And, as they please, give infamy or fame.

Those who are fond of continuing the war, cry up our constant success at a most prodigious rate.

2. To raise the price by proclamation.

All the effect that I conceive was made by crying up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that species, instead of others current here.

CRY. n. f. [cri, French.]

1. Lamentation; shriek; scream.

And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, and there shall be a great cry throughout all the land.

2. Weeping; mourning.

3. Clamour; outcry.

Amazement seizes all; the general cry Proclaims Laocoon justly doom'd to die.

These narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-stock.

4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.

In popish countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to conform the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat.

5. Proclamation.

The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street; as, the cries of London.

7. Acclamation; popular favour.

The cry went out for thee, And still it might, and yet it may again.

8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.

Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beasts, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune.

9. Importunate call.

Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them.

10. Yelping of dogs.

He horns the dog, resolves to try The combat next; but if they cry Invades again his trembling ear, He trait resumes his wonted care.

11. Yell; inarticulate noise.

There shall be the noise of a cry from the fishgate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills.

12. A pack of dogs.

About her middle round, A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd.

You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate As reek of the rotten fens; whose loves I prize As the dead carcasses of unburied men,

That do corrupt my air.

CRYAL. n. f. The heron.

CRYER. See CRYER.

CRYER. n. f. A kind of hawk called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very swift.

CRYPTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτός.] Hidden; secret; occult; private; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes.

not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends.

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.] Occultly; secretly; perhaps, in the following example, the author might have written cryptically.

We take the word acid in a familiar sense, without cryptically distinguishing it from those saps that are a-kin to it.

CRYPTOGRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτός and γραφω.]

1. The act of writing secret characters.

2. Secret characters; cyphers.

CRYPTOLOGY. n. f. [κρυπτός and λόγος.] Ænigmatical language.

CRYSTAL. n. f. [κρύσταλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexible or elastic, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrua, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe.

Island crystal bears a red heat without losing its transparency, and in a very intense heat calcines without fusion; steeped a day or two in water, it loses its natural polish; rubbed on cloth, it attracts straws, like amber.

Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either blemished with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. It is always an oblique parallelepiped of six planes, and found from a quarter of an inch to three inches in diameter. It is moderately heavy, but very soft, and is easily scratched with a pin. It very freely calcines into a pure, but opaque white. It is found in the island of Iceland, and in many parts of Germany and France.

A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on optics, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one, of the same colour and thickness, and running parallel to one another at a small distance.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in filliculins.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concentered by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit.

Crystal is certainly known and distinguished by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same.

3. Crystal is also used for a facitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; though it comes less short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal.

4. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters hot or congealed in manner of crystal.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals.

CRYSTAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods, Thy crystal window open, look out.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds By crystal streams, that murmur through the meads.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline.

We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystal line glass.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime

On the crystalline sky, in espier thron'd

Illustrious far and wide.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the pupilla, nearer to the forepart than the backpart of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the gummy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides.

CRYSTALLIZATION. n. f. [from crystallize.] Congellation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified, according to the nature and texture of the salts. The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the medium or fluid, in which such particles flow, is fited enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet, when they are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily divert them of their falsities, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallic and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodward.

TO CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concreate in crystal.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

TO CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate; congeal; concrete; or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will likewise crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arzobut.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a bear; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outlast the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cub from the bear's. Shakspeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,

The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,

Keep their fur dry. Shakspeare.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cub, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which twining fells had tost,

One as a mountain vault, and with her came

A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,

When time hath fow'd a grizzle on thy case?

Or wilt not else thy craft so quickly grow?

'Tis thine own tip shall be thine overthrow? Shakspeare.

O most comical fight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwell's shop last night; but, such two unlicked cubs!

Gangrene.

TO CUR. v. a. [from curus.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid;

On a brown George with lousy fawlers fed;

Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachio, sup

From a foul jack, or greasy mapple cup. Dryden.

CURATION. n. f. [curatio, Lat.] The act of lying down. Dict.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cuba, Lat.] Recumbent. Dict.

CUBATURE. n. f. [from cuba.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from κῦβος, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetic.] See CUBICK Number.

All the smaller planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common center, and with different velocities.

This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew.

CUBE Root. n. f. The origin of a cubick number; or a CUBICK Root. n. f. number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed;

thus two is the cube root of eight. Chambers.

CUBER. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface, and composed of a corrugated or wrinkled external bark, covering a single and thin friable shell or capsule, containing a single seed of a roundish figure, blackish on the surface, and white within. It has an aromatick, but not very strong smell, and is acrid and pungent to the taste, but less so than pepper.

Cubers are brought into Europe from the island of Java; but the plants, which produces them, is wholly unknown to us.

They are warm and carminative; and the Indians steep them in wine, and esteem them provocatives to venery. Hill.

Aromaticks, as cubers, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer.

CUBICAL. adj. [from cuba.]

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax-candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated. Wallius.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubical number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubical numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubical number. Hale.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Lat.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into discomitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure, and others at eighteen. Calm.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard and a quarter of the stature, and makes a cubit;

the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Hilder.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Milton.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Aristot.

When on the goddess's first I cast my sight,

Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that, unto men below, they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of flocks and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumble. Cowell.

These, mounted on a chair-curule,

Which moderns call a chair-float,

March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cock, Fr. from cocker.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't. Shakspeare.

There have been,

Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;

Aud many a man there is, ev'n at this present,

Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,

That little thinks she has been sluic'd in his absence. Shakspeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed

Of lands, to her the cuckold may succeed. Dryden.

Ever since the reign of King Charles II. the older man is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Susli.

TO CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakspeare.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,

Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;

For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shakspeare.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shakspeare.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me. Dryden's Spenser

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. Arbutnot.

CUC'KOO. n. f. [cuculus, Welsh; cucu, Fr. chuck, Dutch.]
1. A bird which appears in the Spring; and it is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place; from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband at the approach of an adulterer by calling cuckos, which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of its note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Findings Mopsa, like a cuckoo: by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of Spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And does not answer, nay. Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eyes; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shak.

From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of Spring; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Thomson.

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a saical art thou then, to praise him so for running? — —A halfback, ye cuckos; — but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

CUCKOO-BUD. } n. f. The name of a flower.

When daisies pierce, and violets blue,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows most bedight. Shakespeare.

Nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Dandel, and all the weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare. King Lear.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. f.

Cuckoo-spittle, or woodlice, is that spurious dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CUCULLATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded, Latin.]

1. Hooded; covered, as with a hood or cowl.

2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.

They are differently cucullated, and capuched upon the head and back. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CUCUMBER. n. f. [cucumis, Latin] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell-shaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many segments; of which some are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large style in the middle, charged with the farina: others are female, or fruitful, being fastened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinate, which is divided into three or four cells, inclosing many oblong seeds. The species are,

1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turkey cucumber. The first of these kinds is the most common in the English gardens. The second sort, which is by far the better fruit, as being less watery, and containing facet seeds, is the most common kind cultivated in Holland. The third sort is propagated for the uncommon length of its fruit, and also its having less water, and fewer seeds; but it is not so fruitful as the common kind, nor will it come so early.

The common sort is cultivated in three different seasons; the first of which is on hot-beds, under garden-stones, for early fruit: the second is under bell or hand glasses, for the middle crop; and the third is in the common ground for a late crop, or to pickle. Artiller.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,
With crowded bodies and with bellies deep. Dryden.

CUCUMBER. n. f. [cucumis, Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceae plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon. Clemens.

CUCURBITATE. n. f. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical vessel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbitate. Quincy.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quicksilver in a cucurbitate, fitted with a capacious glass head. Hogbe on Colours.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbitate glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis. Mot mer.

CUD. n. f. [cud, Saxon.] That food which is reprinted in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

No XXXV.

You range the pathless wood,

While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryden.

CUD'DEN. } n. f. [without etymology.] A clown; and a stupid

CUD'DY. } adj. ruffick; a low dolt; a low bad word.

The flustering cud'den, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryden.

CU'DOLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To fly close; to squit.

Have you mark'd a partridge qu'e,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon qu'e,
She cud'dle low behind the brake;
Nor would she fly, nor dars the fly. Prior.

CU'DGEL. n. f. [cu'dge, Dutch]

1. A flick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough, and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cu'dgels. Bacon.

Do not provoke the rage of stones
And cu'dgels to thy hide and bones;
I tremble and vanish. Hudibras.

The ass was quickly given to understand with a good cu'dgel, the difference between the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange.

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cud-el on his tougher back. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cu'dgel. Locke.

The wife Cornelius was convinced, that these, being polemical cu'ds, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cu'dge-playing. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. To cu'dge the CUDGELS, is to yield; from the practice of cu'dge-players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cu'dge the cu'dgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

To CU'DOLE. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To beat with a flick.

My lord, he speaks most villi of you, like a foul mouth'd man, as he is; and said he would cu'dle you. Shakespeare.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being flicked and made much of, is only rated off and cu'dgelled for all his courtship. Saunders's Sermons.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cu'dle'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cu'dgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a flick.

His doubtless was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword, yet cu'dge-proof. Hudibras.

CU'DWEED. n. f. [from cu'd and weerd.] A plant.

It hath downy leaves: the flower of the flower is scaly, neither shining nor specious: the cups are cutin form of a star. It is cultivated for medicinal use. Miller.

CUE. n. f. [cueu, a tail, French]

1. The tail or end of any thing; as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last words of a speech which the player who is to answer catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

1 yramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Heccuba to him, or he to Heccuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakespeare.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakespeare. Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Romer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CU'E'RPO. n. f. [Spanish.] To be in cu'e, is to be without the upper coat or cloak, so as to discover the true shape of the cu'e or body.

Expos'd in cu'e to their rage,
Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. f. [zufa, a battle, zufara, to fight, Italian.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
6 C

Th:

The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff.
That down fell piest and book, and book and piest. Shak.
There was, for a while, no money bid for arguments, unless the poet and the player went to cuff in the question.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
Their own feels, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,

White the peers cuff, to make the rabble sport. Dryden.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him. —

—Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shak.

Well, fir Joseph, at your intreaty; but were not you, my friend, abused and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve.

2. To strike with talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,

Sit only watchful with their heavy wings

To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise

To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Orway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,

With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,

Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,

And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food. Dryden.

3. To strike with wings. This seems improper.

How'ring about the coasts they make their moan,

And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own. Dryden.

CUFF. n. f. [cuff, Fr.] Part of the fleece.

He rail'd at tops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistresses in a morning-gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

CUFF. n. f. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into, for carriage to other places. Cowel.

CUFF. n. f. [cuff, Fr. from cur, leather; caraccia, Ital.]

A breakfast.

The lance purfu'd the voice without delay,

And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,

And sign'd his bosom with a purple dint. Dryden.

CUIRASSIER. n. f. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field all iron, cast a gleaming brown,

Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn

Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight. Milton.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUISS. n. f. [cuisse, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,

His cuisse on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,

Rise from the ground like leather'd Mercury. Shakespeare.

The crocket loine, and some the cuisse mould,

With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden.

But what had our author to wound Aeneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuisse to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden.

CULDEES. n. f. [culdei, Latin.] Monks in Scotland.

CULERAGE. n. f. The same plant with ARSE-MART. Arifu.

CULINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newt. n.

To those, who, by reason of their northern expolition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will require the price of their manufacture. Arbutnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cullis, Fr.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had, being cull'd out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keepings, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hester.

Our engines shall be bent

Against the brows of this resifting town:

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,

To cull the plots of best advantage. Shaksp. King John.

Like the bee, culling from every flow'r,

Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Sh.

In this covert will we make our stand,

Culling the principal of all the deer. Shakespeare.

I do remember an apothecary

In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,

Culling of simples. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion. Shaksp. King John.
The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being cull'd, as it were, this grand charter was extracted. Hester's Parley of Bessy.

When false flow'rs of rhetoric thou would'st cull,

Trust nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls. Dryden.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the traders in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Lick.

With humble duty and officious haste,

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast. Prior.

The various off'rings of the world appear:

From each the nicely cull'd with curious toil,

And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoil. Pope.

CULLER. n. f. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CULLION. n. f. [exigine, a fool, Ital. perhaps from scollino,
It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel;

a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gen'e'man,

And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avault, you cullions. Shak.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cul- lion; mean; base.

I'll make a sup o' th' moonshine of you: you whorson, cul- lionly, barber-monger, draw. Shaksp. King Lear.

CULLUMINE. n. f. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE, which see.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Milner.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry-bed;

Her neck, like to a bunch of columbines. Spraffer's Sonnets.

CULLY. n. f. [exigine, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as, by flatterers or a trumpet.

Why should you, whose mother wits

Are furnish'd with all perquisites,

If allow'd to put all tricks upon

Our cull sex, and we use none? Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullier may his boasting spare:

They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cull. Arbutnot.

To CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMINERIOUS. adj. [culmus and ferus, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their feeds are contained in chaffy husks. Bayly.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyperus and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves. Woodward in English.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or meal seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, yre, maize, panic, millet. Arbutnot.

To CULMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Latin.] To be vertical;

to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:

For sight no obstacle found here, or shades;

But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon

Culminat: from th' equator. Milner's Paradise Lost.

CULMINATION. n. f. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABILITY. n. f. [from culpable.] Blameableness.

CULPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Latin.]

2. Guilty

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenker's State of Ireland.

3. Blameable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them, without somehow noted wherein they were culpable, to the end that he him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy,

Thou only art just. Hester's Preface.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable, for as much as it was in every man's power to have prevented it.

South's Sermons.

CULPABLENESS. n. f. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blameably; criminally.

If we perform this duty piously and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate hoily. Taylor.

CULPRIT. n. f. [about this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers, Culprit, God find thee a good deliv'rance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il parait, May it so appear,

with

with of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim;

Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;

And, after forms of law, was last requir'd

To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the public are his judges: by allowing too much, and confederating too far, he may injure his own cause; and by pleading and affecting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior.

CULTER. n. f. [cultur, Latin.] The iron of the plow perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written cultor.

Her follow less

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,

Doth root upon; while that the cultor ruffs,

That should deracinate such savagery. Shakespeare.

TO CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultivator, French.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth, by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton on the Cinquies.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,

And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,

Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,

To cultivate the wild licentious savage

With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,

Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVATION. n. f. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvements, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South's Sermons.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a sea oning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVATOR. n. f. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle's Unsuccessful Experiments.

CULTURE. n. f. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us feed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it. 2 Esdras, viii. 6.

These three last were flower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented 'till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If vain our toil, We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.

Fix'd to no spot is happiness; sincere, Pope's Essay on Man.

1. Key role as vigorous as the sun; Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skillful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Taiter.

TO CULTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to mature; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CULTUR. n. f. [culture, Saxon.] A pigeon. An old word.

Here a well-polish'd mall gives us the joy To see our prince his matchless force employ:

No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball, But 'tis already more than half the mail;

And such a fury from his arm's has got, As from a smoking culturin twice that. Waller.

CULVEREY. n. f. A species of flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culturin and clover, to market-gardens. Waller's Angler.

TO CUMBER. v. a. [cumberen, cumberen, to disturb, Dutch.] To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why ask'st, what avails him not in fight, And would but cumber, and retard his flight.

In which his only excellence is plac'd!

You give him death, that intercept his haste.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears, Dryden.

Clog'd with his cloaths and cumber'd with his years. Dryd n.

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumber'd with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To crowd or load with something useless.

I come seeking fruit on this big tree, and find none: cut it down, why cumber'st it the ground?

Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Luke, xiii. 7.

The multiplying variety of arguments, especially frivolous ones, is not only lost labour, but cumber's the memory to no purpose. Locke.

3. To involve in difficulties and dangers; to distress.

Donnellick tury, and fierce civil strife, Shall cumber all the parts of Italy. Shakspeare, Julius Caesar.

4. To busy; to distract with multiplicity of cares.

Martha was cumber'd about much serving. Luke, x. 40.

5. To be troublesome in any place.

Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge; where, if it chances to prick the owner, it will wear the thorn.

CUMBER. n. f. [cumber, Dutch.] Vexation; embarrassment; obstruction; hindrance; disturbance; distress.

By the occasion thereof I was brought to as great cumber and danger, as lightly any might escape. Sidney.

Thus fade thy helps, and thus thy cumber's spring. Spenser.

The greatest ships are least servicable, go very deep in water, are of marvellous charge and fearful cumber. Raleigh.

CUMBERSOME. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious.

Thinking it too early, as long as they had any day, to break off to pleasing a company, with going to perform a cumber'some obedience. Sidney.

A cloud of cumber'some gnats do him molest;

All striving to infix their feeble stings, That from their noyance he no more can rest. Fairy Queen.

2. Oppressive; burthen'some.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong

Life much! I flent rather, how I may be quit,

Fairest and easiest, of this cumber'some charge. Milton.

Black was his countenance in a little space;

For all the blood was gather'd in his face:

Help was at hand; they rear'd him from the ground,

And from his cumber'some arms his limbs unbound;

Then lanc'd a vein. Dryden.

Possessions load was grown so great,

He sunk beneath the cumber'some weight. Swift.

3. Jumbled; obstructing each other.

Swift to their several quarters hasten then

The cumber'some elements, earth, flood, air, fire. Milton.

CUMFREY. n. f. A medicinal plant.

CUMIN. n. f. [cuminum, Latin.] A plant.

The root is annual, the leaves like those of fenel: the seeds small, long, narrow, and crooked; two of which succeed each other's flower, as in other umbelliferous plants.

The seeds of this plant are used in medicine, which are brought from the island of Malta, where it is cultivated; for it is too tender for our climate. Miller.

Rank-smelling rue, and cumin, good for eyes. Spenser.

TO CUMULATE. v. a. [cumulus, Latin.] To heap together.

A man that beholds the mighty shoals of shells, beidled and cumulated heap upon heap, amongst earth, will scarcely conceive which way itself could ever live. Woodward.

CUNCTATION. n. f. [cunctatio, Latin.] Delay; procrastination; dilatory.

It is most certain, that the English made not their best improvements of these fortunate events; and that especially by two miserable errors, cunctatus in prosecuting, and haste in departure. Woodward.

I he swiftest animal, conjoined with a heavy body, implies that that common moral, sestina lenta; and that celerity should always be contempered with cunctation. Brown.

CUNCTATOR. n. f. [Lat.] One given to delay; a lingerer; an idler; a sluggard.

Others, being unwilling to discourage such cunctators, always keep them up in good hope, that, if they are not yet called, they may yet, with the thief, be brought in at the last hour.

Hammond on Fundamentals.
TO CUND. v. n. [from cunna, to know, Dutch.] To give notice: a provincial or obsolete word. See CONDUR.

Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,

Fit to instruct her youth.—To cunning men

I will be very kind; and liberal

To mine own children, in good bringing up. Shakespeare.

I do present you with a man of mine,

Cunning in mulick and the mathematics,

To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shakespeare.

Wherein is he good, but to taste lack and drink it? Wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? Wherein cunning, but in craft? Wherein crafty, but in villainy?

Wherein villainous, but in all things? Wherein worthy, but in nothing. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Send me therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and that can skill to cut and to grave. 2 Chron. ii. 7.

When Pedro does the lute command,

She guides the cunning artist's hand. Prior.

And over them Arachne high did lift

Her cunning web, and spread her subtle net,

Enwrapped in foul snook, and clouds more black than jet. Spenser's Faery Queen.

And there beside of marble stone was built

An altar, carved with cunning imagery;

On which true Christians blood was often spilt,

And holy martyrs often done to die. Spenser.

Once put out thy light,

Thou cunning pattern of excellence nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heat

That can thy light relumine. Shakespeare. Othello.

3. Artfully deceitful; sly; disguising; tricky; full of fitches and stratagems; subtle; crafty; seditious.

Men will leave truth and misery to such as love it; they are refused to be cunning: let others run the hazard of being finere. South's Sermons.

4. Acted with subtlety.

The more he protested, the more his father thought he dissembled, accounting his integrity to be but a cunning face of falsehood. Sidney.

CUNNING. n. f. [cunninge, Saxon]

1. Artifice; deceit; slyness; slight; craft; subtlety; dissimulation

; fraudulent dexterity.

What if I be not so much the poet, as even that miserable subject of his cunning, wherof you speak. Sidney.

We take cunning for a finisler or crooked wisdom; and certainly there is great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. Bacon's Essays.

These small wares and petty points of cunning are infinite, and it were a good deed to make a list of them; for nothing doth more hurt than that cunning men pass for wise. Bacon.

2. Art; skill; knowledge.

CU'NNINGLY. adv. [from cunning.] Artfully; slyly; subtly;

by fraudulent contrivance; craftily.

Amongst other crimes of this nature, there was diligent enquiry made of such as had raised and dispersed a bruit and rumour, a little before the field fought, that the rebels had the day, and that the king's army was overthrown, and the king slain; whereby it was supposed, that many succours were cun-

ningly put off and kept back. De Witt's History VII.

I must meet my danger, and destroy him first;

But cunningly and cloely. De Witt's History.

When flock is high, they come between,

Making by second hand their offers;

Then cunningly retire unseen,

With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

CU'NNINGMAN. n. f. [cunning and man.] A man who pretends to tell fortunes, or teach how to recover stolen goods.

He sent him for a strong detachment
 Of beadle, constable, and watchmen,
 To attack the cunningman, for plunder
 Committed fully on his lumber. Hudibras.

1. A small vessel to drink in.

Thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler. Genesis, xi. 13.

Ye heavenly powers, that guard

The British isles, such dire events remove

Far from fair Albion; nor let civil broils

Ferment from social cups. Pope.

2. The liquor contained in the cup; the draught

Which when the vile enchanter perceiv'd,

How that my lord from her I would relieve,

With cup thus charm'd, imparting the ceciv'd. Spenser.

All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cups of their deliverings. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Will't please your lordship, drink a cup of sack. Shakespeare.

They that never had the use

Of the grape's surplusing juice,

To the still delicious cup

All their reason render up. Waller.

The best, the dearest fav'rite of the sky,

Must taste that cup; for man is born to die.

3. Social entertainment; merry bout, [in the plural.]

Then shall our names,

Familiar in their mouths as household words,

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakespeare.

Let us suppose that I were reasoning as one friend with another, by the fireside, or in our cups, without care, without any great affection to either party. Keats.

It was near a miracle to see an old man silent, since talking is the disease of age; but amongst cups makes fully a wonder. See. Johnson's Dictionary.

Marrying, or prostituting, as bed

Rape or adultery, where passing fair

Allur'd them: thence from cups, to civil broils! Alfian.

Amidst his cups with fainting th'ingiz'd,

His limbs disjointed, and all o'er d'cas'd,

His hand refuses to sustain the bowl. Dryden's Persius.

4. Any thing hollow like a cup; as the husk of an acorn, the bell of a flower.

A pyrites of the same colour and shape, placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherical figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup. See. Johnson's Dictionary.

5. CUP and CAN. Familiar companions. The can is the large vessel, out of which the cup is filled, and to which it is a custom associate.

You boasting tell us where you din'd,

And how his lordship was to find;

Swear he's a most facetious man;

'I hat you and he are cup and can;

You travel with a heavy load,

And quite mistake preferment's road. Swift.

TO CUP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with cups: this sense is obsolete.

Plumply Bacchus, with pink eyne,

In thy vats our cares be drown'd!

With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd!

Cupus, 'till the world go round. Shakespeare.

2. To fix a glass-bell or cucurbit upon the skin, to draw the blood in scarification.

'He clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,

Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art;

Nor breathing veins, nor cupping will prevail;

All outward remedies and inward fail. Dryden.

You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of the air of Billingsgate, without knowing who I am; or whether I deserved to be cupped and leech'd at this rate. See. Johnson's Dictionary.

Blistering, cupping, and bleeding are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate. See. Johnson's Dictionary.

Him the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd;

They bled, they cupped, they purg'd; in short they cur'd & P. P.

CUPPE'AFER. n. f.

1. An officer of the king's household.

There is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to wait and to be sworn his servant, and shortly after his cupbearer at large; and the summer following he was admitted in ordinary. See. Johnson's Dictionary.

2. An attendant to give wine at a feast.

This vine was said to be given to Tros, the father of Priam, by Jupiter, as a recompence for his carrying away his son

Ganymede to be his cupbearer. See. Johnson's Dictionary.

CUPBOARD. n. f. [cup and board, a case or receptacle, Saxon.]

A case with shelves, in which victuals or earthen ware is placed.

Some trees are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards, and desks, as walnut. Bacon's Natural History.

Codrus had but one bed; so short to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out:
His cupboard's head fix earthen pitchers grac'd,
Beneath them was his trusty tankard plac'd. Dryden.
Yet their wine and their victuals these curmudgeonlubbards,
Lock up from my fight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.
To CUPBOARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To treasure in a cupboard; to hoard up.

The belly did remain
I' th' midst o' th' body, idle and unactive,
Still uphoarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakspeare.

CUPIDITY. n. f. [aviditas, Latin.] Concupiscence; unlawful or unreasonable longing.

CUPOLA. n. f. [Italian.] A dome; the hemispherical summit of a building.

Nature seems to have designed the head as the cupola to the most glorious of her works; and when we load it with supernumerary ornaments, we destroy the symmetry of the human figure. Addison.

CUPPEL. See COPPEL.

There are other bodies fixed, which have little or no spirit;
so as there is nothing to fly out, as we see in the stuff whereof cupels are made, which they put into furnaces, upon which fire worketh not. Bacon.

CUPPER. n. f. [from cup.] One who applies cupping-glasses;
a canstier.

CUPPING-GLASS. n. f. [from cup and glass.] A glass used by kanstiers to draw out the blood by rarifying the air.

glasses*, and brought to suppuration. Wise man.

CUPREOUS. adj. [cupreus, Latin.] Coppery; consisting of copper.

Having, by the intervention of a little sal armoniack, made copper inflammable, I took some small grains, and put them under the wick of a burning candle, whereby they were with the melted tallow so kindled, that the green, not blue, flame of the cupreous body did burn for a good while. Boyle.

CUR. n. f. [cur, Dutch. See CURTAL.]

1. A worthless degenerate dog.

How does your fallow greyhound, fir?—

'Tis a good dog.—

—A cur, fir.—

—Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog. Shakspeare.

Here's an old drudging cur turned off to shift for himself, for want of the very teeth and heels that he had lost in his master's service. L'Estrange.

A cur may bear

The name of tiger, lion, or what'er

Deno the noblest or the fairest beast. Dryden.

2. A term of reproach for a man.

What would you have, ye *cur*s,

That like not peace nor war? Shakspeare.

This knight had occasion to inquire the way to St. Anne'slane; upon which the person, whom he spoke to, called him a young popish cur, and asked him, who made Anne a saint.

Addison's Spectator.

CURABLE. adj. [from curr.] That admits a remedy; that may be healed.

A consumption of the lungs, at the beginning, herein disfers from all other curable diseases, that it is not to be worn away by change of diet, or a cheerful spirit. Harvey.

A desperate wound must skilful hands employ;

But thine is curable by Philip's boy. Dryden.

CURABLENESS. n. f. [from curable.] Possibility to be healed.

CURACY. n. f. [from curate.] Employment of a curate, distinct from a benefice; employment which a hired clergyman holds under the beneficiary.

'They get into orders as soon as they can, and, if they be very fortunate, arrive in time to a curacy here in town. Swift.

CURATE. n. f. [curator, Lat.] A clergyman hired to perform the duties of another.

He spar'd no pains; for curate he had none;

Nor durst he trust another with his care. Dryden.

2. A parish priest.

I thought the English of curate had been an ecclesiastical hiring.—No such matter; the proper import of the word signifies one who has the cure of souls. Cleric.

CURATISHIP. n. f. [from curate.] The same with curacy.

CURATIVE. adj. [from cure.] Relating to the cure of diseases; not preservative.

over the beard of the horse. Farris's Dict.

The ox hath his bow, the horse his curb, and the cart, in his bells; so man hath his desire. Shakspeare.

So four fierce coulters, starting to the race,
Scow'r through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;

Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threat'ning cries they fear. Dryden.

2. Refraining; inhibition; opposition; hindrance.

The Roman state, whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links alongeth, than can ever
Appear in your impediment. Shakspeare.

We remain
In strictest bondage, though thus far remov'd,
Under th' inevitable curbs, reserv'd
His captive multitude. Milton.

By these men, religion, that should be
The curb, is made the spur to tyranny. Denham.

Even they who think us under no other tie to the true interest of our country, will allow this to be an effectual curb upon us. Atterbury.

3. A curb is a hard and callous tumour, which runs along the inside of a horse's leg; that is, on that part of the hoof that is opposite to the leg of the lame side. Farris's Dict.

To CURB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To guide or restrain a horse with a curb.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming field. Milton.

2. To refrain; to inhibit; to check; to confine; to hold back.

had they not governors to curb and keep them still in awe and obedience? Spenser.

Then thou, the mother of so sweet a child,
Her false imagin'd loss cease to lament,
And wisely learn to curb thy sorrows wild. Milton.

If sense and learning are such unfavourable imperious things, he ought to keep down the growth of his reason, and curb his intellectuals. Catlier.

At this the curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb;
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glew'd

Her lips, and raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.

'Till force returns, his ardour we refrain,
And curb his warlike wish to cross the main. Dryden.

Knowing when a muse should be indulg'd
In her full flight, and when she should be curb'd. Resman.

Some poor cottage on the mountain's brow,
Where pinching want must curb thy warm desires,
And household cares suppress thy genial fires. Prior.

Nature to all things fix'd the limits fit,
And wisely curb'd proud man's pretending wit. Pope.

2. Sometimes with from; sometimes with of.

Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by
The consequence of the crown. Shakspeare.

CURD. n. f. [See CRUDE.] The coagulation of milk; the concretion of the thicker parts of any liquor.

Milk of itself is such a compound of cream, curds, and whey, as it is easily turned and dissolved. Bacon.

This night, at least, with me forget your care;
Cheesebuts and curds, and cream shall be your fare. Dryden.

Let Sporus tremble.—What! that thing of silk!
Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk? Pope.

To CURD. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn to curds; to cause to coagulate.

Maiden, does it curd thy blood,
To say I am thy mother? Shakspeare.

To CURDLE. v. n. [from curd.] To coagulate; to thicken together; to concreate.

Powder of mint, and powder of red roses, keep the milk somewhat from turning or curdling in the stomach. Bacon.

The fold, and dairy, hungry bend their flight,
Sip round the pail, or taste the curdling cheefe. Thomson.

To CURDLE. v. a. To cause to coagulate; to force into concretions.

His changed powers at first themselves not felt,
'Till curdled cold his courage 'gan t' assail. Spenser.

Mixed with the sixth part of a spoonful of milk, it burnt to the space of one hundred pulses; and the milk was curdled.
Bacon's Natural History.

My soul is all the fame,
Unmov'd with fear, and mov'd with martial fame;
But my chill blood is curdled in my veins,
And scarce the shadow of a man remains. Dryden.

Ev'n now I fall a victim to thy wrongs;
Ev'n now a fatal draught works out my soul;
Ev'n now it curdles in my shrinking veins
The lazy blood, and freezes at my heart. Smith.

There is in the spirit of wine some acidity, by which brandy curdles milk. Floyer.

CURDY. adj. [from curd.] Coagulated; concreted; full of curds; curdled.

It differs from a vegetable emulsion, by coagulating into a curd with acids.
CURD, n. f. [u. a., Latin.]

1. Remedy; restorative.

This league that we have made,
 Will give her father's very little care.
 Brother of England, how may we content
 This widow lady? Shakespeare.
 Cold, hunger, prisons, it's without a cure,
 All these he hath, and guiltless oft, endure. Dryden.
 Now we're adord, and the next hour displeas'd;
 At first fight we're, and after your dislike. Granville.
 Horace advises the Romans to seek a seat in some remote part,
 by way of a cure for the corruption of their manners. Swift.

2. Act of healing.

I do cure to-day, and to-morrow. Luke.
 The beauche or employment of a curate or clergyman.
 His cur lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against entangling property, spinning out causes, squeezing clients, and making the laws a greater grievance than those who break them. Cadell.

TO CURS, v. a. [cure, Latin.]

1. To heal; to restore to health; to remedy; to recover: with of before the disease. Used of patients or diseases.
 The bones, in sharp colds, was brittle; and therefore all consumptions of bones, in hard weather, are more difficult to cure. Bacon.

Here the poor lover, that has long endur'd
 Some proud tyrannic's scorn, of his fond passion's cur'd. Haller.
 I never knew any man cur'd of inattention. Swift.

Hear what from love untractable hearts endure,
 From love, the sole disease thou canst not cure. Pope.
 2. To prepare in any manner, so as to be preserved from corruption.

The beef would be so ill chosen, or so ill cur'd, as to sink many times before it came so far as Holland. Temple.
CURIOUS, adj. [care and leis.] Without cure; without remedy.

Bootless are plaints, and curdless are my wounds;
 No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight. Shakespeare.
 Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
 To curdless ruin. Shakespeare.

If, said he,
 Your grief alone is hard captivity,
 For love of heaven, with patience undergo
 A curdless ill, since fate will have it so. Dryden.

CURER, n. f. [from cure.] A healer; a physician.
 He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shak.

The indexterity and worse success of the most famous of our confusion, merit, do evidently demonstrate their dimension in beholding its causes. Harvey.

CURFEW, n. f. [caveare feu, French.] An evening-peal, by which the conqueror willed, that every man should rake up his fire, and put out his light; so that in many places at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed time, it is said to ring curfew. Cowell.

You whose pastime
 Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice
 To hear the solemn curfew. Shakespeare.

On a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far off curfew sound,
 Over some wide-water'd shoar,
 Swinging slow with fullen roar. Milton.

2. A cover for a fire; a fireplace.
 But now for pans, pots, curfews, counters and the like,
 the beauty will not be so much respected, so as the compound stuff is like to pass. Bacon.

CURIALITY, n. f. [from curialis, Lat.] The privileges, prerogatives, or perhaps retinue of a court.

The court and curiality. Bacon.

CURIOSITY, n. f. [from curios.]

1. Inquisitiveness; inclination to enquire.

2. Nkety; delicacy.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiety; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. Shakespeare.

3. Accuracy; exactness.
 Qualities are so weighed, that curiety in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakespeare.

Our eyes and senses, however armed or assisted, are too gross to discern the curiety of the workmanship of nature.
Ray on the Creation.

4. An act of curiety; nice experiment

There hath been practis'd also a curiety, to set a tree upon the north-side of a wall, and, at a little height, to draw it through the wall, and spread it upon the south-side; conceiving that the root and lower part of the flock should enjoy the freshness of the shade, and the upper boughs and fruit, the comfort of the sun; but it sortet not. Bacon.

5. An object of curiety; rarity.

We took a ramble together to see the curiities of this great town. Addison.

CURIQUS, adj. [curiosus, Latin.]

1. Inquisitive; desirous of information; addicted to enquiry.

He not curious in unnecessary matters; for more things are shewn unto thee than men understand. Ecclij.

Even then to them the spirit of lyes suggests,
 That they were blind, because they saw not ill;
 And breath'd into their uncorrupted breasts
 A curius with, which did corrupt their will. Daniels.

2. Attentive to; diligent about: sometimes with after.
 It is pity a gentleman so very curius after things that were elegant and beautiful, should not have been as curious as to their origin, their uses, and their natural history. Woodward.

3. Sometimes with of.

Then thus a senior of the place replies,
 Well read, and curius of antiquities. Dryden.

4. Accurate; careful not to mistake.

 and subtlety of wit to be a found believing Christian, men were not curius what syllables or particles of speech they used. Hob.

5. Difficult to please; solicitous of perfection; not negligent;
 full of care.

A temperate person is not curius of fancies and delicious-ness; he thinks not much, and speaks not often of meat and drink. Taylor.

6. Exact; nice; subtle.

Both these senses embrace their objects at greater distance, with more variety, and with a more curious discrimination, than the other sense. Hilder.

7. Artful; not neglectful; not fortuitous.

A vaile obscur'd the sunshine of her eyes,
 The rose within herself her sweetness clos'd;
 Each ornament about her seemly lies,
 By curius chance, or careless art, compos'd. Fairfax.

8. Elegant; neat; labour'd; finished.

Undersliding to devise curius works, to work in gold. Ec.

9. Rigid; severe; rigorous.

For curius I cannot be with you,
 Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well. Shakespeare.
CURIQUSLY, adv. [from curius.]

1. Inquisitively; attentively; studiously.

At first I thought there had been no light reflected from the water in that place, but observing it more curiusly, I saw within it several smaller round spots, which appeared much blacker and darker than the rest. Newton.

2. Elegantly; neatly.

Nor is it the having of wheels and springs, though never so curiusly wrought, and artificially set, but the winding of them up, that must give motion to the watch. Smith.

3. Artfully; exactly.

4. Captiously.

CURI, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A ringlet of hair.

She apparel'd herself like a page, cutting off her hair, leaving nothing but the short curls to cover that noble head. Sidney.
 Just as in act he stood, in clouds enshrin'd,
 Her hand he fasten'd on his hair behind;

Then backward by his yellow curls he drew
 To hint, and him alone confess'd in view. Dryden.

2. Undulation; wave; sinuosity; flexure.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plain and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from the sand holes, a little smothered in polishing with putty.
Newton's Opticks.

TO CURL, v. a. [irullen, Dut. cyrpan, Sax. krillen, Dan.]

1. To turn the hair in ringlets.

What hast thou been?—
 —A serving man, proud in heart and mind, that cur'd my hair, wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her. Shakspeare.

2. To writhe; to twirl.

3. To dress with curls.

If the first meet the cur'd Antony,
 He'll make demand of her kiss. Shakespeare.

Up the trees

Climbing, bat thicker than the silky locks
 That curl'd Megara. Milton.

4. To raise in waves, undulations, or sinuosity.

The vitiation of the winds,
 Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
 Curling their monstrous heads. Shakespeare.

Scals would be pools, without the brushing air

To curl the waves. Dryden.

TO CUR, v. n.

1. To shrink into ringlets.

Those slender arrial bodies are separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle.

2. To rise in undulations.

To every nobler portion of the town,
The curling billows roll their telltale tide;
In parties now they straggle up and down,
As cranes, unoppos'd, for prey divide. Dryden.
While curling fumes from village tops are seen. Page.

3. To swirl itself.

Then round her slender waist he curl'd,
And stamp'd an image of himself a sovereign of the world. Dryden's Fables.

CURLEW. n. f. [curlew, French.]

1. A kind of water-fowl, with a large beak of a grey colour, with red and black spots.

2. A bird larger than a partridge, with longer legs. It runs very swiftly, and frequents the cornfields in Spain, in Sicily, and sometimes in France. Trevoux.

CURMUDGEON. n. f. [It is a vitious manner of pronouncing curmouchon, Fr. an unknown correspondent.] An availing churlish fellow; a miser; a niggard; a churl; a griper.

And when he has it in his claws,
He'll not be hide-bound to the cause;
Nor flit thou find him a curmudgeon,
If thou dispatch it without grudging. Hudibras.

Their wine and their victuals these curmudgeon lubbers
Lock up from my fight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.

A man's way of living is commended, because he will give any rate for it; and a man will give any rate rather than pass for a poor wretch, or a penurious curmudgeon. Locke.

CURMUDGEONLY. adj. [from curmudgeon.] Avaricious; covetous; churlish; niggardly.

In a country where he that killed a hog invited the neighbourhood, a curmudgeonly fellow advised with his companions how he might save the charge. L'Estrange.

CURRENT. n. f.

1. The tree has no prickles; the leaves are large: the flower consists of five leaves, placed in form of a rose: the ovary, which arises from the center of the flower-cup, becomes a globular fruit, produced in bunches.

2. A small dried grape, properly written corinth.
They butter'd currents on fat veal bellow'd,
And rumps of beef with virgin honey stew'd;
Inspid taste, old friend, to them who Paris know,
Where recomble, shallot, and the rank garlick grow. King.

CURRENCY. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation; power of passing from hand to hand.
The currency of those half-pence would, in the universal opinion of our people, be utterly destructive to this kingdom. Swift.

2. General reception.

3. Fluency; readiness of utterance; easiness of pronunciation.

4. Continuance; constant flow; uninterrupted course.
The currency of time to establish a custom, ought to be with a continuance from the beginning to the end of the term prescribed. Ayliffe.

5. General effect; the rate at which any thing is vulgarly valued.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great over-match for this estate, assisted as it is, and may be, is no good mintman, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after intrinsic value. Bacon.

6. The papers stamped in the English colonies by authority, and passing for money.

CURRENT. adj. [current, Latin.]

1. Circulatory; passing from hand to hand.
Shells of silver, current money with the merchant. Gen.

That there was current money in Abraham's time is past doubt, though it is not sure that it was stamped; for he is said to be rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. Arbuthnot.

2. Generally received; uncontradicted; authoritative.

Many strange bruits are received for current. Sidney.
Because such as openly reprove supposed disorders of state, are taken for principal friends to the common benefit of all, under this fair and plausible colour, whatsoever they utter passeth for good and current. Hobbes.

I have collected the facts, with all possible impartiality, from the current histories of those times. Swift.

3. Common; general.

They have been trained up from their infancy in one set of notions, without ever hearing or knowing what other opinions are current among mankind. Watts.

About three months ago we had a current report of the king of France's death. Addison.

4. Popular; such as is established by vulgar estimation.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsic; this, his current value. Gree.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Off leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves our ready wit;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh. Pope.

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fooler than heart can think thee, thou canst make
No excuse current, but to hang thyself. Stowe's poem.

7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course; as, the current year.

CURRENT. n. f.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But his fair course is not hinder'd.

He makes sweet music with th' enamel'd stone. Shakspeare.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quicken'd, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whole fame in thine, like lesser currents lost;
Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods. Denham.

Not fabled I'o more swells the poet's lays,
While through the sky his shining car whirrs. Pope.

2. [In navigation.] Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current; with or against the way of the ship. Harris.

CURRENTLY. adj. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are foreballed, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Mistler.

3. Popularly; fashionably; generally.

4. Without ceasing.

CURRENTNESS. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation.

2. General reception.

3. Easiness of pronunciation.

CARRIER. n. f. [curarius, Latin.] One who dresses and pares leather for those who make shoes, or other things.

A carrier bought a bearskin of a huntsman, and laid him down ready money for it. L'Estrange.

Warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found,
To lodge their loathsome carrion under ground;
For useless to the carrier were their hides,
Nor could their tainted flesh with ocean tides
Be free'd from filth. Dryden.

CURRIER. adj. [from cur.] Having the qualities of a degenerate dog; brutal; fowry; quarrelsome; malignant; churlish; uncivil; untractable; impracticable.

Sweet speaking oft a currier's heart reclaims. Sidney.

No care of justice, nor no rule of reason,
No temperance, nor no regard of season,
Did thenceforth ever enter in his mind,
But cruelty, the sign of currier's kind. Spenser.

In fashions wayward, and in love unkind;
For Cupid deigns not wound a currier's mind. Fairfax.

I would he were in heaven, so he could Entreat some pow'r to change this currier's Jew. Shakspeare.

She says your dog was a cur; and tells you, currier thanks is good enough for such a present. Shakspeare.

TO CURRY. v. a. [co-ium, Latin.]

1. To dress leather, by beating and rubbing it.

2. To beat; to drub; to thrash; to chastise.

A deep design in't to divide
The well affected that confide;
By setting brother against brother,
To claw and carry one another. Hudibras.

I may expect her to take care of her family, and carry her hide in case of refusal.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full; as we see both in men, and in the currying of horses: the cattle is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts. Bacon.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would carry with master Shallow. Shakspeare.

5. To CURRY. For cur. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery.

He judg'd them still over-actively to fawn upon the hearthens, and to curry favour with infernals. Mistler.

This humour succeeded for with the puppy, that an ass would go the lame way to work to curry favour for himself. L'Estrange.

CURRY.

CURRYCOMB. n. f. [from curry and comb.] An iron instrument used for currying horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition; and so he would have of stirrig and fitrum, if, instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he could see stamped in the margin small pictures of these instruments. Locke.

TO CURSE. v. a. [Cyprian, Saxon.]

1. To wish evil to; to execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me. Num.
After Solymán had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly curst the same, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast unto the sea. Knox.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou curst me:

This imprecation was for Laius' death,
And thou hast wished me like him. Dryden.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose
Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such fons as those. Pope.

TO CURSE. v. n. To imprecate; to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.

The filver about which thou *curst*d, and speakest of also in my ears, behold the filver is with me. Jud. xvi. 2.

CURSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Malediction; with of evil to another.

Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul. Jeb. xxxi. 30.

I never went from your lordship but with a longing to return; or without a hearty curse to him who invented ceremonies, and put me on the necessity of withdrawing. Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.

Curse on the stripling! how he apes his fire! Addison.

Ambitiously fententious!

CURSED. participial adj. [from curse.]

1. Under a curse; hateful; detestable; abominable; wicked.

Refrain in me the curst thoughts that nature Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare.

2. Unholy; unanctified; blasted by a curse.

Come, lady, while heav'n lends us grace,
Let us fly this curst place,
Left the forc'er us entice
With some other new device;
Not a waste or needless sound,
'Till we come to holier ground. Milton.

3. Vexatious; troublesome.

This curst quarrel be no more renew'd;
Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still;
Though griev'd, yet subject to her husband's will. Dryden.

One day, I think, in Paradise he liv'd;
Defin'd the next his journey to pursue,
Where wounding thorns and curst thistles grew. Pope.

CURSELY. adv. [from curst.] Miserably; shamefully; a low cant word.

Satisfaction and restitution lies so cursely hard on the gizzards of our publicans. L'Estrange.

Sure this is a nation that is cursely afraid of being over-run with too much politeness, and cannot regain one great genius but at the expense of another. Pope.

CURSEDNESS. n. f. [from curst.] The state of being under a curse.

CURSHIP. n. f. [from cur.] Dogship; meanness; scoundrelship.

How durst he, I say, oppose thy curship,
'Gainst arms, authority, and worship. Hudibras.

CURSITOR. n. f. [Latin.] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shires allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required. They are a corporation among themselves. Cowel.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the curfitor in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him is a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment. Bacon.

CURSORY. adj. [from curfus, Latin.] Curfury; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.

I have but with a curfory eye
O'erglanc'd the articles. Shakespeare.

CURSORYLY. adv. [from curfus.] Hastily; without care; without solicitous attention.

This power, and no other, Luther disowns, as any one that views the place but curforyly must needs fee. Arterbury.

CURSORYNESS. n. f. [from curfus.] Slight attention.

CURSORY. adj. [from curfus, Latin.] Hasty; quick; inattentive; careless.

The first, upon a curfory and superficial view, appeared like the face of another man. Addison.

CURST. adj. Froward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling.

Mr. Malon, after his manner, was very merry with both parties, pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many low school-masters. Ajzen.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,

Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

I have no gift at all in shrewdness:

I am a right maid, for my cowardice;

Let her not strike me. Shakespeare.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough,

Is, that she is intolerably curst;

And shrewd and forward, so beyond all measure,

That, were my state far worse than it is,

I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shakespeare.

Go, write in a martial hand; be curst and brief. It is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent, and full of invention. Sh.

When I diluished him from his intent,

And found him pight to do it with curst speech,

I threaten'd to discover him. Shakespeare.

And though his mind

Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind. Cressp.

CURSTNESS. n. f. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble partners,

Touch you the soft red points with sweetest terms,

Nor curstness grow to the matter. Shakespeare.

Her mouth the writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;

Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did show,

And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryd.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

TO CURTAIL. v. a. [curtis, Latin.] It was anciently written curtel, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut, being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,

Detorm'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time

Into this breathing world. Shelley.

Then why should we ourselves abridge,

And curtail our own privilege?

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ, and expanse of their time, would as assuredly curtail and trench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we mean, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fast his antagonist had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fast, but Festius. Addison.

CURTAIL. Dog. n. f. A dog whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in couring. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail dog, and made me turn it's wheel. Shakespeare.

CURTAIN. n. f. [cortina, Latin.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air. Arctand.

So through white curtains that a tim'rous ray,

And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great dunce! let's the curtain fall.

And universal darkness buries all. Pope.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To close it so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I must draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in suspense, till materials are prepared. Bowen.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last: the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good night. Pope.

3. To open it so as to discern the object.

Had I forgot thee? Oh, come in, Emilia:

Soft, by and by; let me the curtain draw.

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now? Shel.

So soon as the all-cheering fun

Should in the farthest East begin to draw

The staidy curtain from Aurora's b-d. Shakespeare.

Peace, the lovers are asleep. Ther.

They, sweet turtles! folded lie
In the last knot that love could tie:
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
'Till this stormy night be gone;
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtain will be drawn,
And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night.

Cassius.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two battions.

Military Dict.

The governor, not discouraged; suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers.

Kneller.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. f. [from curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred!

The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed.

Dryden.

She sought to exert the authority of the curtain lecture, and, if she finds him of a rebellious disposition, to tame him.

Addis.

7. CURTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep.

Shakespeare.

The wand'ring prince and Dido,

When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,

And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave.

Shakespeare.

But in her temple's last recess inclos'd,

On dulness' lap th' anointed head repos'd:

Him close the curtain'd round with vapours blue,

And soft besprinkled with Cimmerian dew.

Pope.

CURTATE Distance. n. f. [In astronomy.] The distance of a planet's place from the sun, reduced to the ecliptic.

CURVATURE. n. f. [from curva.] Crookedness; inflexion; manner of bending.

It is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow.

Chryse.

Flaccid it was beyond the activity of the muscle, and curvature of the osicles, to give it a due tension.

Haller.

CURVE. adj. [from curvus, Latin.] Crooked; bent; inflected; not straight.

Unless an intrinsic principle of gravity or attraction, may make it describe a curve line about the attracting body.

Brent.

CURVE. n. f. Any thing bent; a flexure or crookedness of any particular form.

And as you lead it round, in artful curve,

With eye intensive mark the springing game.

Thomson.

7. CURVE. v. a. [from curva, Latin.] To bend; to crook; to inflect.

And the tongue is drawn back and curved.

Holder.

7. CURVET. v. n. [from curvatore, Italian.] To leap; to bound.

Cry, holla! to thy tongue, I pry'thee: it curvets unseasonably.

Shakespeare.

Himself he on an enwrig set,

Yet scarce he on his back could get,

So soft and high he did curvet,

'Ere he himself could settle.

Dryden.

Seiz'd with unwonted pain, surpris'd with fright,

The wounded feed curvet; and, rais'd upright,

Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind

Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind.

Dryden.

2. To frolic; to be licentious.

1. A leap; a bound.

2. A frolic; a prank.

CURVILINEAR. adj. [from curvus and linea, Lat.]

1. Consisting of a crooked line.

The impulse continually draws the celestial body from its rectilinear motion, and forces it into a curvilinear orbit; so that it must be repeated every minute of time.

Chryse.

2. Composed of crooked lines.

CURVITY. n. f. [from curva.] Crookedness.

The joined ends of that bone and the incus receding, make a more acute angle at that joint, and give a greater curvity to the posture of the osicles.

Holder.

CUSHION. n. f. [from kussen, Dutch; cousin, French.]

1. A pillow for the seat; a soft pad placed upon a chair.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;

I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Shakespeare.

If you are learn'd,

Be not as common fools; if you are not,

Nº XXXV.

Let them have cushions by you.

Shakespeare.

But e're they sit, officious flauts lays

Two cushions fluff'd with straw, the seat to raise;

Coarse, but the best he had.

Dryden.

An Eastern king put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence; and ordered his hide to be stuffed into a cushion, and placed upon the tribunal, for the lion to sit on.

Swift.

CUSHIONED. adj. [from cushion.] Seated on a cushion; supported by cushions.

Many who are cushioned upon thrones, would have remained in obscurity.

Di. citation on Parties.

CUSP. n. f. [from cuspis, Latin.] A term used to express the point or horns of the moon, or other luminary.

Quincy.

CUSTARD. n. f. [from custard, Welsh.] A kind of sweetmeat made by boiling eggs with milk and sugar, 'till the whole thickens into a mass. It is a food much used in city feasts.

He cram'd them 'till their guts did ache.

With cawdle, custard, and plumb-cake.

Hudibras.

Now may'st and shiverest all huff'd and fatiate lay;

Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day.

Pope.

CUSTODY. n. f. [from custodia, Latin.]

1. Imprisonment; restraint of liberty.

The council remonstrated upon queen Elizabeth the conspiracies against her life, and therefore they advised her, that she should go less abroad weakly attended, as she used; but the queen answered, she had rather be dead than put in custody.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

For our enslav'd, is custody severe,

And stripes, and arbitrary punishment

Inflicted.

Milton.

2. Care; guardianship; charge.

Under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari, shall be the boards of the tabernacle.

Numbers.

We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust

So great a charge from thine own custody?

Shakespeare.

An offence it were, rashly to depart out of the city committed to their custody.

Kneller.

There is generally but one coin stamp'd upon the occasion, which is made a pretext to the person who is celebrated on it: by this means the whole fame is in his own custody.

Addison.

4. Defence; preservation; security.

There was prepared a fleet of thirty ships for the custody of the narrow seas.

Bacon.

CUSTOM. n. f. [from consuetudo, French.]

1. Habit; habitual practice.

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,

That mothers shall but smile when they behold

Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war;

All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds.

Shakespeare.

Custom, a greater power than nature, seldom fails to make them worship.

Locke.

2. Fashion; common way of acting.

3. Established manner.

According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.

1 Sa.

4. Practice of buying of certain persons.

You say he is assiduous in his calling, and is he not grown rich by it? Let him have your custom, but not your votes.

Add.

5. Application from buyers; as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.] A law or right, not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practiced. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued so one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town. Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man: prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom.

Cowell.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported, or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfeitures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts.

Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs, in England.

Temple.

Custom to steal is such a trivial thing,

'That 'tis their charter to defraud their king.

Dryden.

Sirabo tells you, that Britain bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallick trade.

Arbutnot.

CUSTOMHOUSE. n. f. The house where the taxes upon goods imported or exported are collected.

Some customhouse officers, birds of passage, and oppressive thrifty squires, are the only thriving people amongst us. Swift.

CUSTOMABLE. adj. [from custom.] Common; habitual; frequent.

2. Conformity to custom.

CUSTOMABLY. adv. [from customable.] According to custom. Kingdoms have customably been carried away by right of succession, according to proximity of blood. Heyward.

CUSTOMARILY. adv. [from customary.] Habitually; commonly.

To call God to witness truth, or a lie perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, in common discourse, customarily without any consideration of what we say, is one of the highest indignities and affronts that can be offered him. Ray on the Creation.

CUSTOMARINESS. n. f. [from customary.] Frequency; commonness; frequent occurrence.

A vice, which, for its guilt, may justify the sharpest, and for its customariness the frequentest invectives, which can be made against it. Gov. of the Tongue.

CUSTOMARY. adj. [from custom.]

1. Conformable to established custom; according to prescription. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be conful: I have here the customary gown. Shak. Several ingenious persons, whose assistance might be conducive to the advance of real and useful knowledge, lay under the prejudices of education and customary belief. Glanville.

2. Habitual.

We should carefully avoid the profane and irreverent use of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing, and take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship, or any thing belonging to it. Tillotson.

3. Usual; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him

With customary compliment, when he, Waiving his eyes to th' contrary, and falling A lip of much contempt, speeds from me. Shaksp.

CUSTOMED. adj. [from custom.] Usual; common; that to which we are accustomed.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck way's nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shaksp.

CUSTOMER. n. f. [from custom.]

1. One who frequents any place of sale for the sake of purchasing. One would think it Overdone's house; for here be many old customers. Shaksp.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to hire A flattering audience, than poor tradesmen do To persuade customers to buy their goods. Reformers. Don't you hear how Lord Strut has bespoken his liveries at Lewis Baboon's shop? Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day. Arbutnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement. Swift.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer, which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for. Swift.

2. A vessel for holding wine. Ainsworth.

TO CUT. pret. cut; part. pass. cut. [probably from the French couper, a knife.]

1. To penetrate with an edged instrument; to divide any continuity by a sharp edge.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,
That my great heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead killing news. Shaksp.

And when two hearts were join'd by mutual love,
The sword of justice cuts upon the knot,
And severs 'em for ever. Dryden.

Some I have cut away with scissars. Wifeman.

2. To hew.

Thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon. 2 Chro.

3. To carve; to make by sculpture.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster? Shaksp.

The triumphal is, indeed, defaced by time; but the plan of it is neatly cut upon the wall of a neighbouring building. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

4. To form any thing by cutting.

And they did beat the gold into this plates, and cut it into wires. Exodus.

Before the whistling winds the vessels fly,
With rapid swiftness cut the liquid way,
And reach Geressus at the point of day. Pope.

5. To pierce with any uneasy sensation.

The man was cut to the heart with these consolations. Add.

6. To divide packs of cards.

Supine they in their heav'n remain,
Exempt from passion and from pain;
And frankly leave us, human elves,
To cut and shuffle for ourselves. Prior.

We were in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them. Prior.

'Take a fresh pack, nor is it worth our grieving
Who cuts and shuffles with our dirty leaving. Graville.

CUTICLE. n. f. [cuticula, Latin.]
1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering-plaster. It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is also tied by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several layers of exceeding small scales, which cover one another more or less, according to the different thickness of the scarf-skin in the several parts of the body. Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle and nail. Bentley.

2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor.
When any saline liquor is evaporated to cut it, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file. Newton.

CUTICULAR. ad. [from cutis, Latin.] Belonging to the skin.

CUTH, signifies knowledge or skill. So Cuthana is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sophiarus. Gib. Camden.

CUTLASS. n. f. [cutelas, French.] This word is written sometimes cutla, sometimes cutlax: in Shakespeare, cutlax; and in Pope, cutlax. A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the seamen.

Were't not better
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant cutlax upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand. Shakespeare.

To the judgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun;
Of two his cutlax launch'd the spouting blood,
These quarter'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood. Pope.

CUTLER. n. f. [cuteler, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A poultry ring
That she did give, whose poetry was
For all the world like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakespeare.

In a eye cutler's shop on Tower-hill he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Stet.

He chole no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler. Clarendon.

CUTPURSE. n. f. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method method of cutting purfes: a common practice when men were their purfes at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief: a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse. Shakspeare.

A vice of kings,
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket. Shakspeare.

Was there no felony, no bawd,
Cutpurse, not burglary abroad? Hudibras.
If we could imagine a whole nation to be cutpurse and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves. Bestley.

CUTTER. n. f. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.

3. The teeth that cut the meat.

The molars, or grinders are behind, nearest the center of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders. Roy.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them: and then casts the same into the court to be written upon. Covel.

CUT-THROAT. n. f. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an assassin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Kneller.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horrid instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,
And unpaid cut-throat soldiers are abroad;
Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill,
To save complaints and prosecution, kill. Dryden.

CUT-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing. Carver.

Many are propagated above ground by slips or cuttings. Roy.
CUTTLE. n. f. A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange that the blood of all birds and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Roy.

CUTTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foul mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hammer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away; by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the faucy cuttle with me. Shakspeare.

CYCLE. n. f. [cyclot, Latin; κύκλος.]

1. A circle.

2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder.

3. A method, or account of a method continued 'till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavour'd to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive
To have appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and excentrick, scrib'd o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

CYCLOID. n. f. [from κύκλος, of κύκλος and εἶδος, shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLOIDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its sublimance. Chambers.

Get you hence, firrah; faucy fellow, hence. Shakspeare.

CYNOURE. n. f. [from κύνορας.] The star near the North-pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it fees

Bosom'd high in tufted trees,

Where perhaps some beauty lies,

The cynoure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CYON. See CION.

Gather cyon for grafts before the buds sprout. Evelyn.

CYPRESS-TREE. [cypressus, Latin.]

Its leaves are squamose and flat: the male flowers, which are likewise squamose, grow at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The fruit is of a spherical form, and is composed of many woody tubercles, in which are contained hard angular seeds.

The cypressus is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use: its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies. The wood of the cypressus tree is always green, very heavy, of a good smell, and never either rots or is worn eaten. It is distinguished into male and female: the branches of the male are as it were horizontal; and those of the female are upright, which is therefore generally used for palisades of gardens, and to make pyramids. The fruit is round, of an olive colour, and as large as nuts when they are ripe, and it grows in separate places. The Latins call it cavus, because of its figure. This fruit is composed of a kind of scales, in the clefts of which are hidden little seeds, flat and angular. This tree is common on mount Libanus.

In ivory coffers I have stufft my crows;
In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shakspeare.

Dainties and softer eate;

Sleeked limbs, and finest blood? Ben. Johnson's Forest.

2. Elegance; civility.

The duke exceeded in the dainties of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Wotton.

3. Squamishness; fastidiousness.

Of sand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath discoursed without any daintiness. Wotton's Architecture.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Sluiter from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleading to the palate; exquisite taste; delicious.

They are all over water; whereas an higher conception is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty palates are a little dry. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the flower, yet the daintiest sense;

For ev'n the ears of such as have no skill,

Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;

And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Davies.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon's History.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all

Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,

I'll swear hath horns. Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.

Therefore to shaks

And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,

But shift away. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My house, within the city,

Is richly furnished with plate and gold,

Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands. Shakspeare.

Why should ye be so cruel to yourself,

And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent

For gentle usage, and soft delicacy? Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine; in contempt.

Your dainty speakers have the curse,

To plead bad causes down to worse. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. f.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Prov. xxiii. 3.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dainty floor,

And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.

The shepherd swains, with sure abundance blest,

In the fat flock, and rural dainties, feast. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.

Why, that's my dainty; I shall miss thee:

But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shakspeare, Tempest.

There is a fortune coming

Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,

And let thee alone. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

DA'IRY. n. f. [from dry, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England from breeding, either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter, which will be extremely beaten down, when Ireland turns to it too. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

These beauties will suspect

That you have no more worth

Than the coarse and country dairy,

That doth haunt the hearth or dairy. Ben. Johnson.

What stores my dairies and my folds contain!

A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dryden.

She in pens his flocks will fold,

And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewired, are exceeding commodious. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon's Natural History.

DA'IRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.] The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch,

To know their fortunes, equal to the rich:

The dairymaid enquires if she shall take

The trusty taylor, and the cook forfake. Dryden's Juvenal.

Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairymaids. Adapted to Spectator.

DA'IRY. n. f. [bargeage, day's eye. Chaucer] A spring-flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtuse cones. Milner.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,

And lady-smocks all over white,

And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,

Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakspeare.

Then sing by turns, by turns the muses sing,

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring;

Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground:

Begin, the vales shall ev'ry note rebound. Pope's Spring.

This will find these picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Adapted to Spectator.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;

The daisy, primrose, violet, darchy blaze. Tomson's Spring.

DALF. n. f. [daisies, Gothic; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long toft with flumes, and beat with bitter winds,

High over hills, and low adown the dale,

She wandered many a wood and meadur'd many a vale. Spenser's Faerie Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy flat,

This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,

This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd. Tickell.

He steals along the lonely dale

In silent search. Tomson's Spring.

DA'LLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of carefles; acts of fondness.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance

Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw

To th' fire it th' blood. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles

Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as befores

Fair couple, link'd in happy nuptial league,

Alone as they. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I'll head my people;

Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:

My warlike spirits work now another way,

And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant self dismiss'd with the found,

Where he with his Duella dall'ance found,

In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r. Fairy Queen.

That, not my self, where the sapient king

Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Paradise Lost.

Since thou claim'st me for thy fire,

And my fair form here show'st me, the dear pledge

Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n, and joys

Then sweet, now laid to mention. Milton.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Nay, come. I pray you, sir, give me the chain;

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;

And I, to blame, have held him here too long,—

—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse

Your breach of promise. Shakspeare, Comedy of Errors.

DA'LLIER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifler; a fondler.

The daily dallier with pleasant words, with smiling countenance, and with wagers, purposed to be lost, before they were purposed to be made. Aycham's Scho-imagier.

DA'LLOP. n. f. [of unknown etymology.] A tuft, or clump.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,

Leave standing in dallies till time ye do bind. Tusser.

DA'LLY. v. a. [dallies, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles.

Take up thy master:

D A M

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shaksp. King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold
Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.
We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calamity's Sermon.
One hundred thousand pounds must be raised; for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange carresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shaksp.peare.
3. To sport; to frolic.
She her airy buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the fan. Shaksp.peare.
4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgement worthy of God. Hid'm, xii. 26.

To DALLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He fully set down, after his wonted manner, to perform service; not by the hazard of one fat battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Kneels's History.

DAM. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had
Nere never been an emperor, fluide never his dame have be fluine.
Chaucer.]

1. The mother; used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lolling up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss. Shaksp.peare.
Mothers, says a sick kite, give over lamentations, and let me have your prayers: alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange's Fables.

They bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Key.

2. A human mother: in contempt or detestation.
This brat is none of mine;

It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. f. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.
As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a screen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood
Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Pears down the dams with unrelucted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cows away. Dryden.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry flore,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryden.
The infuse of the dam must be very smooth and freight;
and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better.

Merrimer's Husbandry.
To DAM, v. a. [betman, popebetman, Saxon; dammin, Dut.]

1. To confine, or shut up water by moles or daffs.
I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shaksp. Henry VI.

Hence I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
I ill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors, Osway.
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring,
Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread in the grounds,
so far as the earth is soft. Merrimer's Husbandry.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,
And wond'ring at their banks in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shaksp.peare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns. Shaksp.
Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy low level'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

DA'MAGE. n. f. [damage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.
Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon's Essay.

Such as were either sent from thence, or raised here, did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual cels and extortion.

Devereux on Ireland.

D A M

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Carendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Ariston's Paradise Lost.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clericus.

4. Reparation of damage; restitution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon's Henry VIII.

5. [In law.] Any hurt or hindrance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to inquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or defendant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cresol.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person, into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reverber his own sentence when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts's Logic.

To D'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure;
to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many notable authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much fla-tered and damaged, some quite disoriented and broken into pieces.

Addison's Spectator.

To D'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt; as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God,
and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DA'MASCENE. n. f. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small black plum; a Damion, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry tree in blossom, the damascene and plum trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DA'MASK. n. f. [damasquin, French; damaschini, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linnen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part rises above the rest in flowers, or other forms.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deal perplexed was her spirit;
Her damask late, now chang'd to purple white. Fairfax.

To D'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate, to diversify.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Festus.

2. To adorn steel-work with figures.

DAMASK PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK ROSE. n. f. The rose of Damascus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon's Natural History.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks.

Not, shower'd from every bush, the damask-rose. Thomson.

DA'MASKING. n. f. [from damasquiver, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chamber.

DAME. n. f. [dame, French; dama, Spanish]

1. A lady; the title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family;
who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now a-day, it signifies a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in country. Watts's Logic.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect:
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here. Shaksp. Merchant.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shaksp.peare.

Shut your mouth, dame;

Or with this paper I shall stop it; Shaksp. King Lear.

Thou worse than any thing Shaksp.

Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Johnson.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank. Johnson.

- His father Faunus; a Laurentian dame
 His mother, fair Marica was her name.
 Who would not repeat that bliss,
 And frequent fight of such a dame Dryden.
 Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.
 3. Mistress of a low family.
 They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, he would not wake us. L'Estrange.
 4. Woman in general.
 We've willing dams enough; there cannot be
 That culture in you to devour so many,
 As will to greaticks dedicate themselves,
 Finding it to incline. Shakspeare.

DAMES-V. GLETT. n. f.

The flower of this plant, called also queen's gillyflower, consists, for the most part, of four leaves, which expand in form of a cross: out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, which becomes a long, taper, cylindrical pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the imbricate valves adhere on both sides, and are furnished with oblong, cylindrical, or globular seeds. Miller.

TO DAMN. v. a. [dams, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.
 Not in the legions
 Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
 Evil to top Machbeth. Shakspeare.
 It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decrees, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.
 2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.
 That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power, that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South.
 3. To condemn.
 His own impartial thought
 Will dame, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.
 4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.
 They dame themselves, nor will my muse defend
 To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryd.
 For the great sons of wit,
 Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
 To dame all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.
 You are so good a critic, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and next, that you are not so arant a critic as to dame them like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DAMNABLE. adj. [from damn]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.
 It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.
 He's a creature unprepared, unmet for death;
 And, to transport him in the mind he is,
 Were damnably. Shakspeare.
 As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense;
 odious; pernicious.
 Oh thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches. Shakspeare.

DAMNABLY. adv. [from damnably]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.
 We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South.
 2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.
 The more sweets they belov'd upon them the more damnably their conferses stunk. Dennis.

DAMNATION. n. f. [from damn]

- Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.
 He that hath been afflicted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle. Taylor.
 Now mince the sin,
 And mollify damnation with a phrase:
 Say you contented not to Sauch'o's death,
 But barely not forbade it. Dryden.
 DAMNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius] Containing a sentence of condemnation.
 DAMNED. part. adj. [from damn] Hateful; detestable; abor-ranced; abominable.
 Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
 A couch for luxury and damned incest. Shakspeare.
 But, oh, what damned minutes tells he o'er,
 Who doats, yet doubts; suspects, yet hotly loves. Shuk.
 Dare not
 To brand the spotless virtue of my prince
 With falsehoods of most base and damned contrivance. Rowe.

N. XXVII.

DAMNIFIC. adj. [from damnific] Procuring loss; mischief-vious.

TO DAMNIFY. v. a. [from damnific, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.
 He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit satisfaction: the damnified person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self preservation. Locke.
 2. To hurt; to impair.
 When now he saw himself so freely rear,
 As if late fight had nought him damnify'd,
 He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear. Spenser.

DAMNINGNESS. n. f. [from damning] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [damps, Dutch.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.
 She said no more: the trembling Trojan hear,
 O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear. Dryden.
 2. Dejected; sunk; dejected.
 All these and more came flocking, but with looks Downcast and damp; yet such wherein appear'd
 Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton.

A DAMP. n. f.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.
 Thus Adam to himself lamented loud,
 Through the still night; not now, as ere man fell,
 Wholom and cool, and mild; but with black air
 Accompany'd, with damps and dreadful gloom. Milton.
 A rill there was, which from the mountain's height
 Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light,
 A breathing-place to draw the damp's away,
 A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.
 2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.
 The heat of the sun in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these fel-dom happen but in the summer-time, when the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Henslow.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
 Recovering, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
 To Michael thus his humble words address'd. Milton.
 His name struck ev'ry where so great a damp,
 As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Resammon.
 Even now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,
 A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts. Addison.
 An eternal state, he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect which is enough to cast a damp over his spiritlieli hours.
 Rogers.

This commendable repentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

TO DAMP. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.
 2. To depress; to deject; to chill.
 The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. L'Estrange.
 Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and,
 like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterb.
 It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.
 3. To weaken; to abandon.
 A soft body dampeth the found much more than a hard.
 Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold
 Climate, or years, damp my intended wing Depress'd. Milton.

DAMPINESS. n. f. [from damp] Tendency to wetness;
 fogginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampiness. Bacon.

DAMPNESS. n. f. [from damp] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
 Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly;
 'Twas only water thrown on sails too dry. Dryden.

By flocks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils it. Mortimer.

DAMPY. adj. [from damp] Dejected; gloomy; sorrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports. Heyward.

DAMSEL. n. f. [damoiselle, French.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction: now only used in verse.
 Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
 And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r. Prior.
 2. An attendant of the better rank. 6 G With

With her train of damsels the was gone
In shady walks, the forcing heat to thun. Dryden.
3. A wench; a country lass.
The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child. Gay.

DAMSON. n. f. [corrupted from damselenc.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsels,
And made me climb with danger of my life. Shakspeare.
DAN. n. f. [from dominus, as now den in Spanish, and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men; as we now say majesty.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shakspeare.
Dick, if this story pleasest thee, Prior.
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me.

To DANCE. v. n. [danser, Fr. dangar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabick, a dance; as junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from doxeris.]

1. To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.
What say you to young Mr. Fenton? he capers, he dances he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakspeare.

To DANCE ATTENDANCE. v. a. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.
Men are fooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh.

It upbraids you
To let your father's friend, for three long months,
Thus dance attendance for a word of audience. Dryden.

DANCE. v. a.
1. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.
Thy grandfire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shakspeare.

That I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Beside my threshold. Shakspeare.
In perfidencies the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits.

DANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by music.
Our dance of custom, round about the oak of Herne the hunter. Shakspeare.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a dance leads the dance. Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs and wanton dances grac'd. Dryden.
DANCER. n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakspeare.
Musicians and dancers! take some truce
With these your pleading labours; for great use
As much weariness as perfection brings. Denne.
The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful pocr. Wotton.

It is a usual practice in these times for our funambolours, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying. Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,
And balances your fear and hope. Prior.
Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command. Prior.

DANCINGMASTER. n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by a dancingmaster. L'Estrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains into regular and admirable motions. Locke.

DANCING-SCHOOL. n. f. [dancing and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavolta's high, and swift couranto's;
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakspeare.
A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the institution of apes of quality. L'Estrange.

DANIELION. n. f. [dant de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;
For Blouzelinda, blithsome maids, is dead. Gay.
DANDIPRAT. n. f. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; as urchin; a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DANDLE. v. a. [dandelen, Dutch.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. Isaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprites,
Of skip into our chamber those sweet nights.

And, kiss'd and dandl'd on thy father's knee,
Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see. Dennis.

Courts are but superficial schools to dandle fools. Wotton.
Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

Dandled the kid. Milton.
Motion occasions sleep; as we find by the common use of rocking froward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurseries arms. Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.
Their child shall be advanc'd,

And be received for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own. Shakspeare.

They hate put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap;
And I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty maffer. Addison.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles.
Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service to them committed, as if they would not have the enemy subdued. Speyer.

DANDLER. n. f. [from dandl'd.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DANDRUFF. n. f. [often written dandriff, from tan, the itch, and droff, fford, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DANEWURT. n. f. A species of elder; called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DANGER. n. f. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Stinner derives it from dannum; Monge from angaria; Minsheu from danos, death, to which junius seems inclined.] Risk; hazard; peril.

They that fall on the sea, tell of the danger. Eichf.
Our craft is in danger to be set at naught. Mell.

I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakspeare.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billows, and the wind. Waller.

To DANGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up
For the main soldier; whose quality going on,
The sides o' th' world may danger. Shakspeare.

DANGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risk; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless designs, than others in dangerous affecting the multiplying of kingdoms. Sid.

DANGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city. Eichf.
All men counsel me to take away thy life, likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects. Sidney.

Already we have conquer'd half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind the. Dryden.

DANGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.] Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh, believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. Shakspeare.

A sort of naughty persons
Have practis'd dangerously against your state, Dealing with witches and with conjurers. Shakspeare.

It is jilt with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously. Hammond.

Plutarch says Telefilla, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was by the oracle advis'd to apply her mind to the muse and poetry.

If it were so; which but to think were pride,
My constant love would dangerously be try'd. Dryden.

DANGEROUSNESS. n. f. [from dangerous.] Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of our dangerousness of diseases, by the nobleness of that part affected. Boyle.

To DANGLE. v. n. [from hang, according to Stinner; hang, hangl, dangle.] To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yond dangling apricocks. Shakspeare.
He'd rather on a gibbet dangle, Hudibras.

Than miss his dear delight to wrangle.
Codrus had but one leg; so short to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out. Dryden.

With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe. Smith.

DAR

DAR

But have you not with thought beheld
The sword hang dangling o'er the shield. Prior.
2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useless, harmless follower.

The presbyterians, and other fanatics that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment.

DA'NGLER. n. f. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time. Swift.

A angler is of neither sex. Rapb.
DANK, adj. [from tancken, Germ. Stinner.] Damp; humid; moist; wet.

He her the maiden sleeping found,
On the dank and dirty ground. Shakspeare.

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and, rising on stiff pinions, tour
The mid aerial sky. Milton.

Through each thicket, dank or dry,
Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on His midnight search. Milton.

Lawrence, of virtuous father, virtuous son,
Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,
Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a fullen day? Milton.

By the rusby-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the other dank,
My sliding chariot stays. Milton.

Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and dropping weeds
To the stern god of sea. Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather.

DA'NKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dank and dankish vault at home,
There left me. Shakspeare.

DA'P. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water: a word, I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a chub, by dapping with a grashopper. Walton.

DA'PATICAL. adj. [from dapaticus, Latin.] Sumptuous in cheer. Bailey.

DAPPER, adj. [dapper, Dutch.] Little and active; lively without bulk. It is usually spoken in contempt.

Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves. Milton.

A pert dapper spark of a magpie, fancied the birds would never be governed 'till himself should sit at the helm. L'Estr.

DAPPELING. n. f. [from dapper.] A dwarf; a dandiprat.

DAPPLE, adj. [from apple; as pommel.] Marked with various colours; variegated; streaked; imbricated: it is used chiefly of animals.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse, 'till they have run over all beings that are,
and then pitch on dapple. Locke.

DA'PPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak; to vary;
to diversify with colours.

Certes, said she, I wot not how he might;
But under him a grey feld did he weild,
Whose sides with dappled circles were endight. Spenser.

The gentle day
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey. Shakspeare.

Horses that are dappled, turn white; and old squirrels turn grilly. Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
'Till the dappled dawn doth rise. Milton.

I chose
The dapp-l'd pink, and blushing tofe,
To deck my charming Clot's hair. Prior.

The gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs,
Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares. Pope.

Saxon; derren, Dutch.] To have courage for any purpose or to be afraid; to adventure; to be adventurous.

I say 'tis copper. Dar'st thou be as good as thy word now?
—Why, Hal, thou know'st, as thou art but a man, I dare;
but as thou art a prince, I fear thee. Shakspeare.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who *dare*s do more, is none. Shakspeare.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing advent'rously. Shakspeare.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare any dangerous fact. Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul. Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine,
'till it be very fully examined. Watts.

DA'P. v. a. To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life
Did hear challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms. Shakspeare.

Here the stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch;
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love. Shakspeare.

He had many days, in this proud manner, come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, and, as it were, daring them to fight.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare providence to the face. South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Celia's eyes. Ryckman.

Time! I dare thee to discover
Such a youth, and such a lover. Dryden.

Presumptuous wretch! with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the thunder. Granville.

DA'P. v. a. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, which keeps them in amaze 'till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks. Ca. rev.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryden.

DARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Defiance; challenge.

Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakspeare.

DA'REFUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. Shakspeare.

DARING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous; fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has indeed many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human thoughts and passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant.

The song too daring, and the theme too great. Prior.

Grieve not, O daring prince! that noble heart. Pope.

DARINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly; courageously;
fearlessly; impudently; outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press. Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press. Hallifax.

DA'RINGNESS. n. f. [from daring.] Boldness.

DARK. adj. [æopc, Saxon.]

1. Not light; without light

Fiance, his son, who keeps him company,
Must embrace the fate of that dark hour. Shakspeare.

While we converse with her, we mark
No want of day, nor think it dark. Waller.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.

If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean. Levit.

In Muscovy itself the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen. Boyl.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.

Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,
Conduct my weary steps. Dryden.

4. Opaque; not transparent.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain. Hobbs.

Meantime we shall express our darker purpose. Shakspeare.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

The age, wherein he liv'd, was dar; but he Could not want light, who taught the world to see. Danham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison.

DARK. n. f.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n's peep through the blanket of the dar,
To cry hold, hold! Shakspeare.

Cloud and ever-during dar
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immersed, and by curve lines. Hobbs.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one,
I suppose he means, that is in the dar, and thinks it proper to continue so. Atterbury.

3. Want

3. Want of knowledge.

'Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as beasts.

To DARKEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure.
Out of it.

Fair when her breast, like a rich laden bark
With precious merchandise, she forth doth lay:
Fair when that cloud of pride, which oft doth dark
Her goodly light, with smiles the drives away.

To DARKEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.
Black with frowning forests then it flood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood.
Whether the darken'd room to music invite,
Or winter'd wall provoke the few's to write.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand.

3. To foul; to fully.

The lulls and passions of men do fully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence.

To DARKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DARKLING. [a participle, as it seems, from dark, which yet I have never found.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.

The varying shore o' th' world.

The waken'd bird

Sings darkling, and, in shadow'd covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Cice's pow'r,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind

Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd.

DARKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light;
obscurely; blindly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fume to future times conveys but darkly down.

DARKNESS. n. f. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness, and the shadow of death.

2. Opakeness.

3. Obscurity.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

'Tis the instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us

In deepest consequence.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received: to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness.

5. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear son.

DARK-OME. adv. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him through a darksome narrow pass,
To a broad gate, all built of beaten gold.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimm'd were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams.

You must not look to have an image, or the like, in any thing that is darksome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightness and darkness which thence the figure.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Melt eat, and in the ground leave nothing green.

He here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital.

The darksome pines that o'er yon rocks reclind,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind.

DARKLING. adv. [from dark, Sax.] Favourite; dear; beloved;
regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind.

DARKLING. n. f. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,
The phœnix emblem of his reign does guide.

She immediately became the darling of the prince's Sophia.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.] To mend holes by imitating the texture of the fluff.

Will she thy linen wash, or h-less darn?

He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his sockings, which he performed to admiration.

DARNEL. n. f. A weed growing in the fields. See GRASS.

He was met ev'n now

Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
With hardheads, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo flowers,
Darnels, and all the idle weeds that grow

In our unfavouring corn.

Want ye corn for bread?

'Twas full of darnel, do you like the taste?

No fruitful corn the fickle fields return;
But oats and darnel cloak the rising corn.

To DARRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to darn; it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la tentaille.]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darrain a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over-hand.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:
Darrain your battle; for they are at hand.

2. To apply to the fight.

Therewith they 'gan to hurlen greedily,
Redoubt'd battle ready to darraine.

DART. n. f. [dard, French.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance.

O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,
The weapons round his hollow temples ring.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He whets his tuiks, and turns, and dares the war;
Th' invaders dart their jav'lins from afar.

Pan came, and ask'd what magic caus'd my fuzint;
Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart.

2. To throw; to emit; as the sun darts his beams on the earth.

To DART. v. n. To fly as a dart; to let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Peritha, art thou struck.

To DDASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

1. To throw any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dasheth his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as he.

2. To break by collision.

They that flang high, have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

David's throne shall be like a tree,
Spreading and overshadowing all the earth;
Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash
All monarchies besides throughout the world.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy.

4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, shodded

The sudden breach on t.

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.

At once the brushing oars and brazen prow
Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depths below.

6. To mingle; to change by some small admixture.

Hight Whacum, bred to dash and draw,
Not wine, but more unwholesome law.

I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances as may prevent ill-natured applications.

Several revealed truths are dash'd and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions.

7. To form or print in half, carelessly.

Never was dash'd off, at one lucky hit,
A fool, lo just a copy of a wit.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a lute, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you.

9. To confound; to make alienated suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear.

His tongue

Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear
The better reason, to perplex and dash

Matured counsels.

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,

To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd,

An unknown hand shall check'd my forward joy,
Dash'd me with blunders.

To dash this civil, read but the practice of christian em-perors.

Nothing

Nothing dash'd the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, in the very interim while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,
Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love. Addison.
After they had sufficiently bluffed him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our slyly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill.
Dash the proud gemfester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star. Pope.

TO DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface.

If the vessel be suddenly flopt in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Chryse.

2. To fly in flames with a loud noise.
On each hand the gulfing waters play,
And down the rough cascade, while dashing, fall. Thomson.

3. To rush through water so as to make it fly.
Doeg, though without knowing how or why,
Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
Through fence and fontaine, never out or in. Dryden.

A DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Collision.
By the touch ethereal rous'd,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war,
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson.

2. Infusion; something mingled in a small proportion.
There is nothing which one regards so much, with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison.

3. A mark in writing; a line —, to note a pause, or omission.
He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing. Brown's Vulgar Err.
In modern wit all printed trash is Set off with num'rous breaks and dashes. Swift.

4. Stroke; blow.
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.
—She takes upon her bravely at first dash. Shakspeare.

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

And, with a murmuring sound,
Dash, dash, upon the ground,
To gentle flumbers call. Dryden.
DA'STARD. n. f. [abasteruga, Saxon.] A coward; a poltron;
—a man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our dastard nobles,
And suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Shakspeare.

Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?
How long will Dares wait his dastard foes. Dryden.

Dastard and drunkard, mean and insolent;
Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy night;
In threats the foremost, but the last in fight. Dryden.
Such bug-bear thoughts, once got into the minds of children, make them dastardly, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after. Locke.

Curse on their dastard souls, they stand astonish'd. Addison.
TO DA'STARD. v. a. To terrify; to intimidate; to desert with cowardice; to dispirit.

I'm weary of this flesh which holds us here,
And dastards manly foul with hope and fear. Dryden.

TO DA'STARDISE. v. a. [from dastard.] To intimidate; to desert with cowardice; to dispirit; to deprecate; to terrify; to make an habitual coward.

He had such things to urge against our marriage,
As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle. Dryden.
And dastardise my courage.

DA'STARDLY. adj. [from dastard.] Cowardly; mean; timorous.

This way of brawl and clamour is so arrant a mark of a dastardly wretch, that he does as good as call himself to that use it. L'Estrange.

DA'STARDY. n. f. [from dastard.] Cowardliness; timorousness.

DATARY. n. f. [from date.] An officer of the Chancery of Rome, through whose hands most benifices pass. Dial.

DATE. n. f. [Latet, Fr. from datum, Latin.]

1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning.

2. The time at which any event happened.

3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.
His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates Shakspeare.

Has smelt my credit.

My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds, without a date, they say are void. Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.
N° XXXVI.

What time would spare, from steel receives its date;
And monuments, like men, submit to fate. Pope.

5. Duration; continuance.
Could the declining of this fate, O friend,
Our date to immortality extend? Donham.

Then raise,
From the flagrant mass, purg'd, and refin'd,
New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date,
Founded in righteousness. Milton.

6. [from datylus.] The fruit of the date-tree.
Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.
—They call for dates and quinces in the palfrey. Shakspeare.

DATE-TREE. n. f. See PALM, of which it is a species.

TO DATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To note with the time at which any thing is written or done.

'Tis all one, in respect of eternal duration yet behind, whether we begin the world so many millions of ages ago, or date from the late æra of about six thousand years. Bentley.

To all their dated backs he turns you round;
These Aldus printed, those Du Sicil has bound. Pope.

DA'TELES. adj. [from date.] Without any fixed term.
The fly-dow hours shall not determinate

The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakspeare.

DA'TIVE. adj. [dativus, Latin.]

1. [In grammar.] The epithet of the case that signifies the person to whom any thing is given.

2. [In law.] Those are term'd dativ executors who are appointed such by the judge's decree; as administrators with us here in England. Ascham.

TO DAUB. v. a. [dabben, Dutch; dauber, French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.
She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daub'd it with slime and with pitch. Exodus.

2. To paint coarsely.
Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want talfe light to set it off. Otway.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daub'd over with too little reflection, and too much haste. Dryden.

If a picture is daub'd with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or strong, something that disguises what it lies upon.
So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakspeare.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.
Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance than daub'd with cost. Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.
Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

TO DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite.
I cannot daub it further;

And yet I must. Shakspeare.

A DAUBER. n. f. [from daub.] A coarse low painter.
What they call'd his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to excite laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous taphier, Thomas,
Hangs a new angel two doors from us,
As fine as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

DA'UBRY. n. f. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as this is beyond our element. Shakspeare.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Vicious; glutinous; adhesive.
Not in vain th' industrious kind,
With dauby wax and flow'r's the clinks have lin'd. Dryden.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby marling bind,
Or fear-cloth matts with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

DA'UGHTER. n. f. [daughter, Gothick; dochter, Saxon; datter, Runick; dochter, German; dochter, Dutch.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.
Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, your youths, could not fill up
The cittern of my lust. Shakspeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
With rosy lullure purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.
Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Genesis.

4. [In poetry.] Any dependent.
The penitent of a confessor.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mafs?

—My leisure serves me, penive daughter, now. Shakspeare.

TO DAUNT. v. a. [daunter, French, desmarter, Latin.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms through Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.
Where the rude ax, with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt, Milton.
Or fright them from their hollow'd haunt.
Some preferences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DAUNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not daunted; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on Shakespeare.
The dauntless spirit of resolution.
Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd:
With flame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd.
Dryden's Virgil's Æneid.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrents with a dauntless breast. Dryden.
The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pepe.

DAUNTLESSNESS. n. f. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.
DAW. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be named from his note; by Jainus to be corrupted from daw; the German tul, and doh, in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] The name of a bird.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daw to peck it. Shakespeare.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
That daw, and trees, and rocks should lift so long,
When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. f. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow or incision in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Moxon.

TO DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.
Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small in-regularity of stuff should happen, job the edge into the stuff, and so dawk it. Moxon.

TO DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance towards day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.
I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.
As it began to dawn, towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pepe.

2. To glimmer obscurely.
A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understandings, hath this principle constantly inculcated, viz. that he must believe as the church. Lact.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pepe.

DAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ,
To search the land, and where the cities lie,
And what the men; but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.
These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pepe.

But such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence, and undimbling truth. Thomson.

DAY. n. f. [Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle?
Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackmore.

Or object new
Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, called the natural day.
How many hours bring about the day?
How many days will finish up the year? Shakespeare.

3. Light; sunshine.
Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day:

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day:
'Midst this was heard the thrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age;
the time. In this sense it is generally plural.
After him reigned Gutheline his heir,
The justest man, and truest, in his day. Fairy Queen.

I think, in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pepe.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. Woodward.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his word; that is, in his whole life.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.
His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey. Rojanman.

The noble thames do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself proffers your's,
And little is to do. Shakespeare.

Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day? Dryden.

7. An appointed or fixed time.
Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryden.

a book in which all the occurrences of the day are set down.

DAY-BREAK. n. f. [day and break.] The dawn; the first appearance of light.

I watch'd the early glories of her eyes,
As men for daybreak watch the Eastern skies. Dryden.

DAYLABOUR. n. f. [day and labour.] Labour by the day;
labour divided into daily tasks.

Doth God exact daylabour, light deny'd,
I fondly ask. Milton.

Did either his legs or his arms fail him? No; but daylabour was but an hard and a dry kind of livelihood to a man, that could get an estate with two or three strokes of his pen. South.

DAYLABOURER. n. f. [from daylabour.] One that works by the day.

In one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thrif'd the corn
'That ten daylabourers could not end. Milton.

The daylabourer, in a country village, has commonly but a small pittance of courage. Lact.

DAYLIGHT. n. f. [day and light.] The light of the day, as opposed to that of the morn, or a taper.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to sad succeeding night. Fairy Queen.

Nay, then thou mock'st me: thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see. Shakespeare.

Now go thy way.
They by daylight passing through the midst of the Turks fleet, safely recovered the haven, to the great joy of the be-lieged Christians. Knutli.

He stands in daylight, and disdains to hide
An act, to which by honour he is ty'd. Dryden.

Will you murder a man in plain daylight?
Yet though rough bears in covert seek defence,
White foxes stay, with seeming innocence; Dryden.

That crafty kind with daylight can dispense.
If bodies be illuminated by the ordinary prismatic colours, of they will appear neither of their own daylight colours, nor of the colour of the light cast on them, but of some middle colour between both. Newton.

DAY-LIE. n. f. The same with ASPHODEL, which see.

DAYSMAN. n. f. [day and man.] An old word for umpire. Sinf.

The vengeance preft? Fairy Queen.

DAYSPRING.

DA'YSPRING. n. f. [day and spring.] The rise of the day; the dawn; the first appearance of light.

So all ere dayspring, under conscious night,
Secret they finish'd, and in order set. Milton.

The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With dayspring born, here leave me to respire. Milton.

DA'YSTAR. n. f. [day and star.] The morning star.

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wife,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great:

I meant the daystar should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucient feat. Ben. Johnson.

Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor;
So sinks the daystar in the ocean bed,

And yet anon repairs his drooping head. Milton.

DAYTIME. n. f. [day and time.] The time in which there is light, opposed to night.

1. To overpower with light; to hinder the action of the sight by sudden lustre

Fears use, many times, to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them. Bacon.

How is it that some wits are interrupted;
That now they dazzled are, now clearly see? Davies.

The places that have either fining ornaments or manners, have no occasion for them: a dazzling expression rather damages them, and serves only to eclipse their beauty. Pope.

2. To strike or surprise with splendour.

Those heav'nly shapes
Will dazzle now this earthly, with their blaze Insufferably bright. Milton.

Ah, friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, or touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

7. DAZZLE. v. n. To be overpowered with light; to lose the power of sight.

Dazzle mine eyes? or do I see three suns? Shakespeare.

Come, boy, and go with me; thy light is young;
And you shall read, when mine begins to dazzle. Shakespeare.

An oversight maketh the eyes dazzle, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.

Look, Dianet, for I dare not trust these eyes;
They dance in mists, and dazzle with surpise. Dryden.

touch the same features over again, and change the dead colouring of the whole. Dryden.

11. Obsolete; dull; not sprightly. Useful of founals.

We took a bell of about two inches in diameter at the bottom, which was supported, in the middle of the cavity of the receiver, by a bent stick, by reason of its spring against the opposite parts of the inside of the vessel; in which, when it was closed up, we observed that the bell seemed to sound more dead than it did when just before it sounded in the open air. Boyle.

12. Dull; frigid; not animated; not affecting.

How cold and dead does a prayer appear that is composed in the most elegant forms of speech, when it is not heightened by solemnity of phrase from the sacred writings? Addison.

DEAD-RECKONING. n. f. [a sea-term.] That estimation or conjecture which the seamen make of the place where a ship is, by keeping an account of her way by the log, by knowing the course they have steered by the compass, and by rectifying all with allowance for drift or lee-way; so that this reckoning is without any observation of the sun, moon, and stars, and is to be rectified as often as any good observation can be had.

DEAF. adj. [deaf, Dutch.]

1. Wanting the sense of hearing.

Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf. Shakespeare.

Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakespeare.

The chief design here intended by this account of the natural alphabet, is to prepare a more easy and expedite way to instruct such as are deaf and dumb, and dumb only by consequence of their want of hearing. Hilder.

If any sins afflict our life

With that prime ill, a talking wife,

'Till death shall bring the kind relief,

We must be patient, or be deaf. Prior.

Thus you may still be young to me,

While I can better hear them see:

Oh ne'er may fortune show her spite,

To make me deaf, and mend my sight. Swift.

It has to be before the thing that ought to be heard.

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;

Nor tears, nor prayers shall purchase out abuses. Shakespeare.

Oh, that men's ears should be

To counsel deaf, but not to flattery!

Whilst virtue courts them; but, alas, in vain: Shakespeare.

Fly from her kind endearing arms,

Deaf to her soulful call, blind to her greatest charms. Ross.

Not so, for once indulg'd, they sweep the main;

Deaf to the call or hearing, hear in vain. Dryden.

Hope, too long with vain delusion fed,

Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,

Gives to the roll of death his glorious name. Pope.

3. Deprived of the power of hearing.

Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight:

No mortal courage can support the fright. Dryden.

4. Obscurely heard.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,

But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;

Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow roar

Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore. Dryden.

The rest were seiz'd with fullen discontent,

And a deaf murmur through the squadrons went. Dryden.

DEAF. v. a. To deprive of the power of hearing.

Hearing hath *deaf*d our failures; and if they Know how to hear, there's none know what to say. Dumas.

A swarm of their aerial shapes appears,

And, fluttering round his temples, *deaf*s his ears. Dry.

TO DEAFEN. v. a. [from deaf.] To deprive of the power of hearing.

But Salus enters; and exclaiming loud,

For justice *deaf*ens, and disturbs the crowd. Dryden.

From shouting men, and horns, and dogs, he flies,

*Deaf*en'd and thun'd with their promiscuous cries. Addison.

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church. Hilder.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It is a general word for expressing much joined with the word great.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest a great deal than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth. Hilder.

There is, indeed, store of matters, sifter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in. Hilder.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deaf;

But sorrow, flout'd at, is double death. Shakespeare.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tedious visits. Bon. Jonson.

The charge, some deal thee haply honour may,

That noble Ludovic had while here he liv'd. Pope.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, let them rest assured, that they have so much the more reason a great deal to doubt of
it. Smith.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and ingenuity, has puzzled and perplexed his cause, by throwing his thoughts together in a studied confusion. Addison.

3. The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid support,

Unskill'd in all the terms of art!

Or in harmonious numbers put

The deal, the shuffle, and the cut. Swift.

4. [deaf, Dutch.] Firwood; the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being pulpishly interposed between my eye, placed in a room; and the clearer daylight was not only

only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lovely red.
Boyle on Caesar.

To DEAL, v. a. [deale, Dutch.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house.
Machiavelli, 1517.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.
Dryden.
The business of mankind in this life, being rather to act than to know, their portion of knowledge is dealt them accordingly.
Addison's Spectator.

How Spain prepares her banners to unfold.
And Rome deals out her blessings and her gold.
Tiebell.
Had the philosophers and great men of antiquity been possessed of the art of painting, there is no question but they would have made an advantage of it, in dealing out their lectures to the publick.
Addison's Spectator.

If you deal out great quantities of strong liquor to the mob, there will be many drunk.
Watts.

2. To scatter; to throw about.
Keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Nature's devoted thus tell,
When flying through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt.
Dryden's Fables.

3. To give gradually, or one after another.
The mighty mullet deals toounding blows;
Till the proud battlements her tow'rs inclose,
His lifted arms around his head he throws,
And death, in whistling air, his empty blows.
Dryden.

To DEAL, v. n.
1. To traffick; to transact business; to trade.

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by a man himself, than by the mediation of a third party.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, which all other petty merchants deal but for parcels.
Dewey's Poetry.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick.
South.

Two deep enemies,
To foes to my rest, a my sweet sleep's disturbers, are they that I would have thee deal upon.
Shakespeare.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright.
Locke.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suitors are so disaffected with delays and abuses, that plain-dealings, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious.
Bacon.

The Scripture knows even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they propose themselves in it.
Abury's Sermons.

Among all sets of authors, there are none who deal upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in politics.
Adams's Remarks.

True logic is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute and wrangling, to which the former ages had debased and confused it.
Hutchinson's Letters.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with; to have that which is some of their own given to them.
Boyle's Ireland.

Who then shall guide

His people? Who defend? Will they not deal

With his his followers, than with him they deal? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that.
South's Sermons.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead.
Dryden.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles.

Reflected on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, had been thus dealt with by their country.
Swift.

DEAN, n. f. [decanus, Latin; decan, French.]

From the Greek word deka, in English, ten; because he was an only set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral churches.
Dr. J. Parram.

As there are two divisions of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbey, transformed from abbot or prior, and converted to dean and chapter; to these are two members, each of them deans; but one of the old foundation are brought in, the dignity which bishops, the king first leaving them, and giving his mandate to install them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters-patents, without other election or confirmation; his word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain secular churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex.
Cowley.

The dean and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for his government in causes ecclesiastical. Use of their bell means to prick such to those places who are fit for that purpose.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

DEANRY, n. f. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.

When he could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal, he made him his successor in that near attendance upon the king.
Clarendon.

2. The revenue of a dean.

Put both deans in one; or, if that's too much trouble,

Instead of the deans, make the deanry double.
Swift.

DEBAR. n. f. [debarcher, Fr. débarcher, Latin.]
1. To corrupt; to vitiate.
'Tis it is to counsel things that are unjust; first, to debar
a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection.
Dryden's Spanish Flyer.
2. To corrupt with lewdness.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, to debar and bold,
That this our court, infested with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakspeare, King Lear.
3. To corrupt by intemperance.
No man's reason did ever debar to him, that it is reasonable for him to debar himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality. Tillotson's Sermons.
DEBAR. n. f. [from the verb.] A fit of intemperance;
luxury; excess; lewdness.
He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; 'till within a little while he recovers his former debar, and is well again, and then his appetite returns. Gulamp.
The first physicians by debar were made;
Excess began, and sloth sustains the trade. Dryden.
DEBAR. n. f. [from debarcher, French.] A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.
Could we but prevail with the greatest debar amongst us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments. South's Sermons.
DEBAR. n. f. [from debar.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.
DEBAR. n. f. [from debar.] The practice of excess;
intemperance; lewdness.
Oppose vices by their contrary virtues, hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt's Sermons.
These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them.
Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.
DEBAR. n. f. [from debar.] The act of debauching
or vitiating; corruption.
They told them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens, or the debauchment of nations, or the extreme poverty of learned persons. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
DEBAR. n. f. [debar, Latin.] To conquer; to overcome in war.
It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debauching of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawless, but as meritorious even of divine honour. Bacon's Holy War.
Him long of old
Thou didst debar, and down from heaven cast
With all his army. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
DEBAR. n. f. [from debar, Latin.] The act of conquering in war.
DEBAR. n. f. [debar, Latin, from debar.] A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.
You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,
Have desperate debar on your frame;
And little would be left you, I'm afraid,
If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid. Swift.
DEBAR. adj. [debar, Latin.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint;
without strength; imbecile; impotent.
I have not wash'd my nose that bleed,
Or soil'd some debar wretch, which without note
There's many else have done. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
DEBAR. v. a. [debar, Latin.] To weaken; to make taint; to enfeeble; to emaculate.
In the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seemed as weakly to fail as their *debar*ed posterity ever after. Brown's 'I' wiggar Errours.
The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of ven-tuating and purifying the blood, and *debar*ed in attracting nutriment for the parts. Harvey on Consumptions.
DEBAR. n. f. [from debar, Latin.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin. K. Charles.
DEBILITY. n. f. [debilitas, Latin.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecility.

Metethinks I am partaker of thy passion, Sidney.
 And in thy case do glass mine own debility.
 Aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to the inconveniences of too strong a perspiration, which are debility, faintings, and sometimes sudden death. Artabont.

DEBONAIRE. adj. [debonnaire, French.] Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant.

Crying, let be that lady debonair,
 Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare Spenser.
 To battle, if thou mean her love to gain.

He met her once a maying,
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh blown roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair, Milton.
 So bucksome, blithe, and debonair.

The nature of the one is debonair and accessible; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightly, the other slow and saturnine. Huxley's Vocal Forest.

And she that was not only passing fair,
 But was withal discreet and debonair, Dryden.
 Resolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil.

DEBONAIRELY. adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

DEBT. n. f. [debitum, Latin; dette, French.]

1. That which one man owes to another.

There was one that died greatly in debt: well, says one, if he be gone, then he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world. Bacon's Apophthegms.

The debt of ten thousand talents, which the servant owed the king, was no slight ordinary fun. Duppa's Devotions.

To this great loss a sea of tears is due;
 But the whole debt not to be paid by you. Waller.

Above a thousand pounds in debt,
 Takes horse, and in a mighty fret Swift.
 Rides day and night.

2. That which any one is oblig'd to do or suffer.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
 He only liv'd but 'till he was a man, Shakspeare. Macbeth.

I am debt both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wife and to the unwife R. m. i. 14.

The case of debtors in Rome, for the first four centuries, was, after the set time for payment, no choice but either to pay, or be the creditor's slave. Swift.

2. One that owes money.

I'll bring your latter hazard back again,
 And thankfully rest debt r for the first. Shakspeare.

If he his ample palm
 Should hap'ly on ill-fated shoulder lay
 Of debt, frait his body, to the touch

Obsequious, as whilom knights were wont,
 To some enchanted cattle is convey'd. Philips.

There dy'd my father, nor man's debt;
 And there I'll die, nor worse, nor better. Pope.

3. One side of an account book.

When I look upon the debt side, I find such innumerable articles, that I want arithmetick to cast them up; but when I look upon the creditor side, I find little more than blank paper. Addison's Spectator.

Dryden.

DECEIVER, n. f. [from deceive.] One that leads another into error; a cheat.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more;

Men were deceivers ever;

One foot in sea, and one on shore;

To one thing constant never.

Shakespeare.

As for his dissimulation out of France, they interpreted it not as if he were detected, or neglected for a counterfeit de- ceiver.

Bacon.

Those voices, actions or gestures, which men have not by any compact agreed to make the instruments of conveying their thoughts one to another, are not the proper instruments of deceiving, so as to denominated the person using them a har or deceiver.

Saunders.

It is to be admired how any deceiver can be so weak to forget things near at hand, when a very few months must of necessity discover the imposture.

Swift.

Adieu, the heart-expanding bowl,

And all the kind deceivers of the soul.

Pope.

DECEMBER, n. f. [december, Latin.] The last month of the year; but named december, or the tenth month, when the year began in March.

Men are April when they woo, and December when they wed.

1. Propriety of form; proper formality; becoming ceremony.

Those thousand decencies, that daily flow

From all her words and actions.

Milton.

In good works there may be goodness in the general; but decency and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good.

Spratt.

Nº XXXVII

Were the offices of religion strip'd of all the external de- centies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them.

Atterbury.

She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;

But never, never reach'd generous thought:

Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,

Content to dwell in decencies for ever.

Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.

And must I own, she said, my secret smart?

What with more decency were in silence kept.

Dryden.

The next consideration, immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing;

what is suitable or unsuitable to it; and from this springs the notion of decency or indecency, that which becomes or mis-becomes.

South.

Sentiments which raise laughter, can very seldom be admitted with any decency into an heroic poem.

Adisson.

3. Modesty; not baldry; not obsequy.

Of all who my Charinus did forsake;

And of each legion each centurion shall die.

Dryden.

TO DECIPHER. v. a. [de chiffer, French.]

1. To explain that which is written in ciphers.

Zelmene, that had the same character in her heart, could easily decipher it; and therefore, to keep him the longer in speech, desired to know the conclusion of the matter, and how the house of Damas was escaped.

Sidney.

Assurance is writ in a private character, not to be read, nor understood, but by the conscience, to which the spirit of God has vouchsafed to decipher it.

South.

2. To write out; to mark down in characters.

Could I give you a lively representation of guilt and horror on this hand, and paint out eternal wrath, and decipher eternal vengeance on the other, then might I shew you the condition of a sinner hearing himself denied by Christ.

South.

Then were laws of necessity invented, that so every particular subject might find his principal pleasure, deciphered unto him, in the tables of his laws.

Locke.

3. To stamp; to characterize; to mark.

You are both decipher'd

For villains mark'd with rape.

TO DECK. v. a. [decken, Dutch.]

1. To cover; to overspread.

Ye mists and exhalations, that now rise
From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,
'Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
In honour to the world's great Author, rise!
Whether to deck with clouds th' uncoloured sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
Rising or falling, still advance his praise.

Milton.

2. To dress; to array.

Sweet ornament! that deck'st a thing divine
Long may'st thou live to wait thy children's love,
And see another, as I see thee now,

Shakespeare.

Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art fall'd in mine.

Shakespeare.

She lets to work millions of spinning worms,

That in their green thops weave the smooth-haired silk,

Milton.

To deck her sons.

DELETTERIOUS. adj. [deleterius, Latin.] Deadly; destructive of a poisonous quality.

Many things, neither deleterius by substance or quality, are yet destructive by figure, or some occasional activity. Born.

DELET'ERY. adj. [from deleterius, Lat.] Destructive; deadly; poisonous.

Nor doctor epidemic,

Though stor'd with deletary medicines,

(Which whoever took is dead since)

E'er sent so fast a colony

To both the under worlds as he. Hall.

DELETION. n. f. [delectio, Latin.]

1. Act of rasing or blotting out.

2. A destruction.

Indeed, if there be a total deletion of every person of the opposing opposing party or country, then the victory is complete, because none will be to call it in question.

D. LE. { n. f. [from delwan, Sax. to dig.]

1. A mine; a quarry.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought: the del's would be so blown with water, that no guns or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.

1. Eardien ware: counterfeit China ware, made at Delph.

Thus batter thou out a piece of del's:
No, not for China's wide domain itself.

DELIBERATION. n. f. [deliberatio, Latin.] An essay; a taste.

DELIBERATE. v. n. [delibere, Lat.] To think, in order to choice; to hesitate.

A conscious, wife, reflecting cause,

Which freely move, and acts by reason's laws;

That can deliberate: means end, and find

Their due connection with the end design'd.

When love once pleads admission to our hearts,

In spite of all the virtue we can boast,

The woman that deliberates is lost.

DELIBERATE. adj. [deliberatus, Latin.]

1. Circumspect; wary; advised; discreet.

2. Slow; tedious; not sudden.

Commonly therefore it is for virtuous considerations, that wisdom so far prevaileth with men as to make them desirous of slow and deliberate death, against the stream of their sensual inclination.

Echoes are some more sudden, and chop again as soon as the voice is delivered; others are more deliberate, that is, give more space between the voice and the echo, which is caused by the local nearness or distance.

DELIBERATELY. adv. [from deliberate.] Circumspectly; advisedly; warily.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies; knows better than any man what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall; but moves on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, is sure to put his staff before him.

DELIBERATENESS. n. f. [from deliberate.] Circumspection; wariness; coolness; caution.

They would not stay the ripening and season of counsels, or fair production of ads, in the order, gravity, and deliberateness befitting a parliament.

DELIBERATION. n. f. [deliberatio, Latin.] The act of deliberating; thought in order to choice.

If mankind had no power to avoid ill or chuse good by free deliberation, it should never be guilty of any thing that was done.

DELIBERATIVE. adj. [deliberativus, Lat.] Pertaining to deliberation; apt to consider.

DELIBERATIVE. n. f. [from the adjective] The discourse in which a question is deliberated.

In deliberatives, the point is, what is evil; and of good, what is greater; and of evil, what is less.

DELICACY. n. f. [delicatus, French; of delicatus, Latin.]

1. Daintiness; fineness in eating.

On hospitable thoughts intent,

What choice to chuse for delicacy best.

2. Any thing highly pleasing to the senses.

I mean of taste, sight, smell, herbs, fruits, and flowers;

Walks, and the melody of birds.

3. Softness; feminine beauty.

She had never seen a man of a more goodly presence, in whom strong making took not away delicacy, nor beauty fierceness.

4. Nicety; minute accuracy.

Van Dyck has even excelled him in the delicacy of his colouring, and in his cabinet pieces.

5. Neatness; elegance of dress.

6. Politeness; gentleness of manners.

7. Indulgence; gentle treatment.

Persons in those posts are usually born of families noble and rich, and so derive a weakness of constitution from the ease and luxury of their ancestors, and the delicacy of their own education.

8. Tenderness; scrupulousness; mercifulness.

9. Weakness of constitution.

DELICATE. adj. [delicatus, French.]

1. Fine; not coarse; consisting of small parts.

2. Beautiful; pleasing to the eye.

3. Nice; pleasing to the taste; of an agreeable flavour.

The chusing of a delicate before a more ordinary dish, is to be done as other human actions are, in which there are no degrees and precise natural limits described.

4. Dainty; desirous of curious meats.

5. Choice; select; excellent.

6. Polite; gentle of manners.

7. Soft; effeminate; unable to bear hardships.

Witness this army of such maids and charge, I ed by a delicate and tender prince.

Tender and delicate persons must needs be oft angry, they have so many things to trouble them, which more robust natures have little sense of.

8. Pure; clear.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate.

DELICATELY. adv. [from delicate.]

1. Beautifully.

Ladies, like varicard tips, show,

'Tis to their changes half their charms we owe;

Such happy spots the nice admirer take,

Fine by defect, and delicately weak.

2. Finely; not coarsely.

3. Daintily.

Eat not delicately, or nicely; that is, be not troublesome to thyself or others in the choice of thy meats, or the delicacy of thy sauces.

4. Chivalry.

5. Politely.

6. Effeminately.

DELICATES. n. f. [from delicate.] The state of being delicate; tenderness; softness; effeminacy.

The delicate woman among you would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicacies and tenderness.

DELICATES. n. f. [from delicate.] Niceties; rarities; that which is choice and dainty.

The shepherd's homely curds,

His cold thin drink, out of his leather bottle,

All which secure and sweetly he enjoys,

Is far beyond a prince's delicates.

They their appetites not only feed

With delicates of leaves and marshy weed;

But with thy fickle reap the ranket land,

And minister the blade with bounteous hand.

With abstinence all delicates he fees,

And can regale himself with toast and cheese.

DELICIES. n. f. pl. [deliciae, Latin.] Pleasures. This word is merely French.

And now he has pour'd out his idle mind

In dainty delices and lavish joys,

Having his warlike weapons cast behind,

And flowers in pleasures and vain pleasing toys.

DELICIOUS. adj. [deliciousus, French; from delicatus, Latin.]

1. Sweet; delicate; that affords delight; agreeable; charming; grateful to the sense or mind.

It is highly probable, that upon Adam's disobedience Almighty God chased him out of paradise, the fairest and most delicious part of the earth, into some other the most barren and unpleasant of all the whole globe.

In his last hours his easy wit display;

Like the rich fruit he feigns, delicious in decay.

Still on that breast enamour'd let me lie,

Still drink delicious poison from the eye.

DELICIOUSLY. adv. [from delicious.] Sweetly; pleasantly; delightfully.

How much she hath glorified herself and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her.

DELICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from delicious.] Delight; pleasure; joy.

Let not man judge of himself, or of the blessings and efficacy of the sacrament itself, by any sensible relish, by the gust and deliciousness, which he sometimes perceives, and other times does not perceive.

DELIGATION. n. f. [deligatio, Latin.] A binding up.

The third intention is deligative, or retaining the parts so joined together.

DELIGHT. n. f. [delictus, Fr. from delictus, Latin.]

And Saul commanded his servants, saying, commune with David secretly, and say, behold the king hath delighted in thee, and all his servants love thee; now therefore be the king's son-in-law.

2. That which gives delight.

Come, sisters, cheer we up his spirits,

And shew the best of our delights:

We'll charm the air to give a sound,

While you perform your antick round.

Titus Vespasian was not more the delight of human kind: the universal empire made him only known, and more powerful, but could not make him more beloved.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight;

Most in his thought, and ever in his sight.

TO DELIGHT. v. n. [delictus, Latin.]

1. To please; to content; to satisfy; to afford pleasure.

Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

O God, command deliverance for Jacob.

What'er befalls, your life shall be my care;

One death, or one deliverance we will share.

3. The act of speaking; utterance; pronunciation.

It seriously I may convey my thoughts

In this my light deliverance, I have spoke

With one that in her sex, her years profession,

Wisdom and constancy, hath amaz'd me more

Than I dare blame my weakness.

4. The act of bringing children.

Ne'er mother

Rejoic'd deliverance more.

People have a superstitious belief, that in the labour of women it helpeth to the easy deliverance.

DELIVERER. n. f. [from deliver.]

1. A saviour; a rescuer; a preserver; a releaser.

It doth nobly set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour; and this, although the deliverance came from the one end of the world unto the other.

By that feed

Is meant thy great deliverer, who shall bruise

The serpent's head.

Andrew Doria has a statue erected to him at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the glorious title of deliverer of the commonwealth; and one of his family another, that calls him in preserver.

Him their deliverer Europe does confess,

All tongues extol him, all religions bless.

She wishes for death, as a deliverer from pain.

2. A relation; one that communicates something by speech or writing.

Divers chymical experiments, delivered by sober authors, have been believed false, only because the menstruums, or other materials employed in the unsuccessful trials of them, were not as highly rectified, or otherwise as exquisitely depurated, as those that were used by the deliverers of those experiments.

DELIVERY. n. f. [from deliver.]

1. The act of delivering, or giving.

2. Release; rescue; saving.

He swore, with fobs,

That he would labour my delivery.

3. A surrender; giving up.

After the delivery of your royal father's person into the hands of the army, I undertaking to the queen mother, that I would find some means to get access to him, she was pleased to send me.

Nor did he in any degree contribute to the delivery of his house, which was at first imagined, because it was so ill, or not at all defended.

4. Utterance; pronunciation; speech.

We allege what the scriptures themselves do usually speak, for the saving force of the word of God, not with restraint to any certain kind of delivery, but however the same shall chance to be made known.

5. Use of the limbs; activity.

The earl was the taller, and much the stronger; but the duke had the neater limbs, and freer delivery.

6. Childbirth.

Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out.

DELL. n. f. [from dell, Dutch.]

1. A pit; a valley; a hole in the ground; any cavity in the earth. Obsolete.

The while, the like same unhappy ewe,

Whose clouted leg her hurt doth flow,

Fell headlong into a dell.

I know each lane, and every alley green,

Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood.

But, foes to sun-shine, melt they took delight

In del and dales, conceal'd from human sight.

DELTUM. n. f. [from Delphi, the name of the capital of Delphiland.] A fine sort of earthen ware.

A supper worthy of herself;

Five washings in five plates of delph.

DELTAIDE. adj. [from delta, the fourth letter of the Greek alphabet so called by reason of its resembling this letter.] An epithet applied to a triangular muscle arising from the clavicle, and from the process of the same, whose action is to raise the arm upward.

Cut still more of the deltoide muscle, and carry the arm backward.

DELUSIVE. adj. [from delude.] Liable to be deceived; that is false, imposed on.

XXXVIII.

Not well understanding omniscience, he is not so ready to deceive himself as to falsify unto him whose cogitation is no ways deludible.

DELUDE. v. a. [delude, Latin.]

1. To beguile; to cheat; to deceive; to impose on.

O, give me leave, I have deluded you.

'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam'd,

But Reigner, king of Naples, that prevail'd.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence

Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince.

2. To disappoint; to frustrate.

DELUDER. n. f. [from delude.]

1. A beguiler; a deceiver; an imposor; a cheat; a false pretender.

Say, flatterer, say, ah fair deluder speak;

Answer me this, ere yet my heart does break.

DELVE. v. a. [Sclavian, Sax. delven, Dut. perhaps from delven, a hog. Junius.]

1. To dig; to open the ground with a spade.

It shall go hard

But I will delve one yard below the mines,

And blow them at the moon.

Delve of convenient depth your threshing floor:

With temper'd clay then fill and face it o'er.

Besides, the filthy swine will oft o'er.

Thy firm inclosure, and with delving snout

'He rooted forest undermine.

2. To fathom; to sift; to found one's opinion.

What's his name and birth?

— I cannot delve him to the root: his father

Was call'd Scellius.

DELVE. n. f. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pitfall; a den; a cave.

He by and by

His feeble feet directed to the cry;

Which to that shady delve him brought at last,

Where Mammon carst did find his treasury.

Such a light and metall'd dance

Saw you never yet in France;

And by landmen, for the nonce,

That turn round like grindle-stones,

Which they dig out fro' the delver,

For their bairns bread, wives, and selves.

A DELVE of Coal. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit.

DELVER. n. f. [from delve.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

DELUGE. n. f. [deluge, French, from diluvium, Latin.]

1. A general inundation; a laying intirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force

His channel to a new or narrow course,

No longer then within his banks he dwells,

Fir'd to a torrent, then a deluge swells.

3. Any sudden and ruthless calamity.

DELUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow,

By which the delver'd earth would useless grow.

Still the battering waves rush in Implacable, 'till delug'd by the foam

The ship links, found'ring in the vast abyss.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood,

Shall deluge all.

DELUSION. n. f. [delusio, Latin.]

1. A cheat; a guile; deceit; treachery; fraud; collusion; falsehood.

2. A false representation; illusion; error; a chimerical thought.

Who therefore seeks in thee

True wisdom, finds her not, or by delusion.

I waking, view'd with grief the rising sun,

And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone.

DELUSION. adj. [from delusio, Latin.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,

Delusive sights and brittle vows we bear.

'Till you at length believe it true:

Caught by your own delusive art,

You fancy fight, and then assert.

While the base and grovelling multitude of different nations,

Rank and ages were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest.

A vast variety of phenomena, and those many of them so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake.

DELUOUS. adj. [from delusio.]

DELU'SORY, adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to believe.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusive prejudice. Glauville.

DE'MAGOGUE, n. f. [δῆμαγωγός.] A ringleader of the rabble; a populous and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. Swiss.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice upon this branch of their art. Swift.

DEMA'IN.

DEME'IN. } n. f. [domaine, French.]

DEME'SNE.

That land which a man holds originally of himself, called demium by the civilians, and opposed to feudum or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders; although the copyhold belonging to any manor, according to many good lawyers, is also accounted demium. Philips.

Having now provided

A gentleman of noble parentage,

Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied. Shakespeare.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and feignory, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies.

The defects in those acts for planting forest-trees might be fully supplied, since they have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen: and even there, in general, very unskillfully made, and thriving accordingly. Swift.

DEMA'ND. n. f. [demand, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. Daniel.

Giving vent, gives life and strength to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them. Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily. Adelphi.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaintiff; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand: in law, as every entry in land-districks for rent, taking or seizing of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law. Blount.

To DEMA'ND. v. a. [demandeur, French.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh, which I demand of him, Is dearly bought, 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakespeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Jacob did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered. 2 Samuel.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakespeare.

Young one,

Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,

They crave to be demand'd. Shakespeare.

The oracle of Apollo being demand'd, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, reply'd, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Peacocks.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMANDABLE, adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All furs demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation, already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

DEMANDANT. n. f. [from demand.] He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands.

Coke.

One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted. Spectator.

DEMA'NDER. n. f. [demandeur, French.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.

2. One that asks a civil question.

And deadly hue, an armed corse did lie. Spenser.

To DEME'AN. v. a. [from demer, French.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately. South.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever. Tillotson.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains,

How with too high a nymph he might

Demean himself the wedding-night. Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.

Now, out of doubt, Antiphilus is mad;

Else he would never so demean himself. Shakespeare.

DEME'ANOUR. n. f. [demeaner, Fr.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain. Steele.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour. Howe.

His gestures fierce

He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone,

As he suppos'd, all unobscur'd, unseen. Milton.

To whom thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek,

Ill worthy I, such tide should belong

To me transgressor! Milton.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at the siege of Rec, both at the landing, and upon the retreat. Clarendon.

They should not be able once to stir, or to murmur, but it should be known, and they shrouded according to their demerits. Hayes.

Thou liv'st by me; to me thy breath resign;

Mine is the merit, the demerit thine. Dryden.

Whatever they acquire by their industry or ingenuity, should be secure, unless forfeited by any demerit or offence against the custom of the family. Taylor.

2. Anciently the same with merit; desert.

'Tis yet to know,

Which when I know that boasting is an honour,

I shall premeditate, I fetch my life and being

From men of royal siege; and my demerits

May speak, unbought, to as proud a fortune

As this that I have reach'd. Shakespeare.

To DEME'RIT. v. a. [démériter, French.] To deserve blame or punishment.

DEMERSED. adj. [from demersus, of demerge, Lat.] Plunged; drowned. Dial.

DEMER'SION. n. f. [demersio, Latin.]

DEMONOLGY. n. f. [δαίμων and λόγιον.] Discourse of the nature of devils.

Thus king James entitled his book concerning witches.

DEMONSTRABLE. adj. [demonstrabilis, Lat.] That which may be proved beyond doubt or contradiction; that which may be made not only probable, but evident.

The grand articles of our belief are as demonstrable as geometry. Glanv.

DEMONSTRABLY. adv. [from demonstrable.] In such a manner as admits of certain proof; evidently; beyond possibility of contradiction.

He should have compelled his ministers to execute the law, in cases that demonstrably concerned the publick peace. Cl.

To DEMONSTRATE. v. a. [demonstro, Latin.] To prove with the highest degree of certainty; to prove in such a manner as reduces the contrary position to evident absurdity.

We cannot demonstrate these things fo, as to show that the contrary often involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

DEMONSTRATION. n. f. [demonstratio, Latin.]

1. The highest degree of deducible or argumental evidence; the strongest degree of proof; such proof as not only evinces the position proved to be true, but shews the contrary position to be absurd and impossible.

What appeared to be true by strong and invincible demonstration, such as wherein it is not by any way possible to be deceived, therunto the mind doth necessarily assent. Hobbs.

Where the agreement or disagreement of any thing is plainly and clearly perceived, it is called demonstration. Locke.

2. Indubitable evidences of the senses or reason.

Which way soever we turn ourselves, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Till.

DEMONSTRATIVE. adj. [demonstrativus, Latin.]

He must be of a very sluggish or sluggish humour, that shall demur upon setting out, or demand higher encouragements than the hope of heaven. Decay of Piety.

News of my death from rumour he receiv'd,
 And what he wish'd, he easily believ'd;
 But long demur'd, though from my hand he knew
 I liv'd, so loth he was, to think it true. Dryden.

3. To doubt; to have scruples or difficulties; to deliberate. There is something in our composition, that thinks and apprehends, and reflects and deliberates, determines and doubts, consents and denies; that wills and demurs, and resolves and chuses and rejects. Bentley.

TO DEMUR. v. a. To doubt of.

The latter I demur; for in their looks Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears. Milton.
DEMUR. n. f. [from the verb.] Doubt; hesitation; suspense of opinion.

O progeny of heav'n, empyreal thrones!
 With reason hath deep silence and demur
 Seiz'd us, though undimay'd. Milton.
 Certainly the highest and dearest concerns of a temporal life are infinitely less valuable than those of an eternal; and consequently ought, without any demur at all, to be sacrificed to them, whenever they come in competition with them. South.

All my demurs but double his attacks;
 At last he whippers, Do, and we go snacks. Pope.

DEMURE. adj. [des mûrs, French.]

1. Sober; decent.

 With countenance demure, and modest grace. Spenser.
 Come, penive nus, devout and pure,
 Sober, steadfast and demure. Milton.

2. Grave; affectedly modest: it is now generally taken in a sense of contempt.

After a demure travel of regard, I tell them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs. Shakespeare.
 There be many wife men, that have secret hearts and transparent countenances; yet this would be done with a demure abating of your eye sometimes. Bacon.

A company of mice, peeping out of their holes, spied a cat, that lay and looked to demure as if there had been neither life nor foot in her. L'Estrange.

So cat, transform'd, fat gravely and demure,
 'Till mouse appear'd, and thought himself secure. Dryden.

Jove sent and found, far in a country scene,
 Truth, innocence, good-nature, look serene;
 From which ingredients, fir'd, the dextrous boy
 Pick'd the demure, the awkward, and the coy. Swift.

TO DEMURR. v. n. [from the noun.] To look with an affected modesty.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
 And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour,
 Demuring upon me. Shakespeare.

DEMURRLY. adv. [from demure.] With affected modesty; solemnly; with pretended gravity.

Put on a sober habit,
 Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,
 Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely. Shakespeare.

Esof's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman, fat very demurely at the board's end, 'till a mouse ran before her. Bacon.

Next flood hypocrisy with holy leer,
 Soft smiling, and demurely looking down;
 But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

2. In the following line it is the same with solemnly.

Hark, how the drums demurely wake the sleepers. Shakespeare.

DEMURENESS. n. f. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.

Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor fool apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMURRAGE. n. f. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMURRER. n. f. [demurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco sed maruri.] A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge, with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is there stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the sergeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cowell.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe.

DEN. n. f. [seen, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole, which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, den and caves under the earth. Hesker.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What shall they seek the lion in his den,
 And fright him there? Shakespeare.
 The tyrant's den, whose ufe, though lost to fame,
 Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;

The cavern, only to her father known,
 By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryden.

'Tis then the chapecels bear his den forsakes;
 In woods and fields a wild destruction makes. Dryd.

3. Den may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both. Gibson.

DENAY. n. f. [a word formed between deny and ay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say
 My love can give no place, bide no denay. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

DENDROLOGY. n. f. [δένδρον and λογος.] The natural history of trees.

DENI'ABLE. adj. [from deny.] That which may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENI'AL. n. f. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

2. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial:
 I must and will have Catharine to my wife. Shakespeare.
 The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much: on the other side, to find people so full of humanity, did comfort us. Bacon.

He, at every fresh attempt, is repell'd
 With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

3. Ahijuration; contrary to acknowledgment or adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him. South.

DENIER. n. f. [from deny.]

1. A contradicter; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watt's Logic.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was to fearful when Christ looked his denier into reprobation, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction? South.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier: sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Charles.

DENIER. n. f. [from denier, Lat. It is pronounced as denier, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sous.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
 —No, not a denier. Shakespeare.

TO DENIGRATE. v. a. [denigrare, Latin.] To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own fustia. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness. Boyle.

DENIGRATION. n. f. [denigratio, Latin.] A blackening, or anking black.

These are the advenient and artificial ways of denigration, answereably whereto may be the natural progress. Brown.
In several instances of denigration the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts. Boyle.

DENIZATION. n. f. [denizen, Latin.] The act of infranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens appears by the characters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them.

DENIZEN. } n. f. [denizidyn, a man of the city, or denizen.]
DENISON. } n. f. [denizid, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one infranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Davies.

Thus th' Almighty fire began: ye gods,
Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants, with hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their feed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to feed as a free denizen of the world. Grew.

He summons straight his denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the fails repair. Pepe.

TO DENIZE. v. a. [from the noun.] To infranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all;
Mingled thus, their issue is incognito;
Falshood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous. Denne.

TO DENOMINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

Their commendable purpose being not of every one understood, they have been in later ages construed as though they had successfully meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorified creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places. Hesker.

Predetermination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious, to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills? Hammend.

DENOMINATION. n. f. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians? Spenser's State of Ireland.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryden.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the Heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like. South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confound ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DENOMINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That which gives a name; to which confers a distinct appellation.

2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominative.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year. Cocker.

DENOMINATOR. n. f. [from denominate.] The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the less of one name should have one common denominator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DENOMINATOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in $\frac{5}{8}$ the denominator shews you, that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 5 shews, that you take 5 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker.

Denominator of any proportion, is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 5) 30 (6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio. Harris.

DENOTATION. n. f. [denotatio, Latin.] The act of denoting.

Other depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities. Lake.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wick for so great a pleasure of life. Adams.

Passion can depress or raise

The heavenly, as the human mind. Prior.

DEPRESSION. n. f. [depressio, Latin.]

1. The act of pressing down.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtle bodies, that in respect of them, even surfaces that are sensibly smooth, are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protuberances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red or blue, even when most carefully polished. Boyle.

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan; not doubting but a small depres- sion of the bone will either rise, or call off, by the benefit of nature. W'feman.

3. The act of humbling; abatement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute,

but less safe. Bacon.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,

Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sandys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Speltzer.

DESCANT. n. f. [djascanto, Italian.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. Shakespeare.

The wakeful nightingale

All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure, or contempt.

Look you get a prayer book in your hand,
And stand between two churches, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakespeare.
Such kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren. Government of the Tongue.

TO DESCANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts.
2. To discourse at large; to make speeches: in a sense of censure or contempt.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time;
Unless to fly my shadow in the sun, -
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakespeare.

Com'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict? Milton.
A virtuous man should be plac'd to find people descanting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvass'd and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison.

TO DESCEND. v. a. [descendo, Latin.]

1. To come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.
The rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. Matthew.

The brook that descended out of the mount.

He cleft his head with one descending blow. Dryden.

Foul with stains

Of gushing torrents and descending rains. Addison.

O goddess! who, descending from the skies,

Vouchsaf'd thy presence to my wond'ring eyes. Pope.

2. To come down in a popular sense, implying only an arrival at one place from another.

He shall descend into battle, and perish. 1 Samuel.

3. To come suddenly or violently; to fall upon as an enemy.

For the pious fire preserve the son;
His with'd return with bappy pow'r befriend,
And on the furies let thy wrath descend. Pope.

4. To make an invasion.

The goddess gives th' alarm; and soon is known

The Grecian fleet, descending on the town. Dryden.

A foreign son upon the shore descends,

Whose martial fame from pole to pole extends. Dryden.

5. To proceed from an original; to be extracted from.

Despair descends from a mean original; the offspring of fear, laziness, and impatience. Collier.

Will is younger brother to a haronet, and descended of the ancient family of the Wimbles. Addison.

6. To fall in order of inheritance to a successor.

Should we allow that all the property, all the estate of the father, ought to descend to the eldest son; yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power, cannot descend unto him by necessity. Locke.

The inheritance of both rule over men and property, in things sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Our author provides for the defending and conveying down of Adam's monarchical power to posterity, by the inheritance of his heir, succeeding to his father's authority. Locke.

7. To extend a discourse from general to particular considerations.

Congregations discerned the small accord that was among themselves, when they descended to particulars. Deity of Mary.

TO DESCEND. v. a. To walk downward upon any place.

He ended, and they both descend the hill;

Descended Adam to the bow'r where Eve

Lay sleeping. Milton.

In all our journey through the Alps, as well when we climbed as when we descended them, we had still a river running along with the road. Addison.

In the midst of this plain stands a high hill, so very steep, that there would be no mounting or descending it, were not it made up of a loose crumbled earth. Addison.

DESCENDANT. adj. [descendens, Fr. descendant, Latin.]

The offspring of an ancestor; he that is the line of generation at whatever distance.

The descendants of Neptune were planted there. Bacon.

O, true descendant of a patriot line,

Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see. Dryden.

He revealed his own will, and their duty, in a more ample manner than it had been declared to any of my descendants:
before them. Atterley.

DESCENDENT. adj. [descendens, Latin.] It seems to be established that the substantive should derive the termination from the French, and the adjective from the Latin.]

1. Falling; sinking coming down; descending.

There is a regrefs of the sap in plants from above downwards;
and this descendent juice is that which principally nourishes both fruit and plant. Ray.

2. Proceeding from another as an original or ancestor.

More than mortal grace

Speaks thee descendent of æthereal race. Pope.

DESCENDIBLE. adj. [from descend.]

1. Such as may be descended; such as may admit of a passage downwards.

2. Transmissible by inheritance.

According to the customs of other countries those honorary fees and infatuations were descendible to the eldest, and not to all the males. Hale.

DESCENSION. n. f. [descensus, Latin.]

1. The act of falling; descent.

2. A declension; a degradation.

From a god to a bull! a heavy descension,

It was Jove's case. From a prince to a 'prentice? a low transformation: that shall be mine. Shakespeare.

3. [In astronomy.] Right descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign or star below the horizon of a direct sphere.

Oblique descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign below the horizon of an oblique sphere. Oron.

DESCENSIONAL. adj. [from descension.] Relating to descent.

DESCENT. n. f. [descensus, Latin; descent, French.]

2. The act of passing from a higher place.

Why do fragments, from a mountain rent,

Tend to the earth with such a swift descent? Blount.

2. Progress downwards.

Observing such gradual and gentle descents downwards, in those parts of the creation that are beneath men, the rule of analogy may make it probable, that it is so also in things above. Locke.

3. Obliquity; inclination.

The heads and sources of rivers flow upon a descent, or an inclining plane, without which they could not flow at all. Woodward.

4. Lowest place.

From the extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy feet,
A moist toad-spotted retreat. Shakespeare.

5. Invasion; hostile entrance into a kingdom; in allusion to the height of ships.

At the first descent on shore, he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Newton.

The duke was general himself, and made that unfortunate descent upon the life of Ree, which was attended with a miserable retreat, in which the flower of the army was lost. Car.

Arise, true judges, in your own defence,
Control those soppings, and declare for sense;
For should the souls prevail, they stop not there, Dryden.
But make their next descent upon the fair.

6. Transmission of any thing by succession and inheritance.

If the agreement and consent of men first gave a separate into any one's hand, that also must direct its descent and conveyance. Locke.

7. The state of proceeding from an original or progenitor.
All of them, even without such a particular claim, had great reason to glory in their common descent from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to whom the promise of the blessed seed was feverily made. Atterbury.

- 8 Birth; extraction; process of lineage.
I give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heiress in true descent!
God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.

- Turnus, for high descent and graceful mien,
Was first, and favour'd by the Latian queen. Dryden.

9. Offspring; inheritors; those proceeding in the line of generation.
The care of our descent perplexes us most,
Which must be born to certain woe. Milton.

- From him
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.
10. A single step in the scale of genealogy; a generation.
No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself. Lockier.

- Then all the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thirged eleven descents to be crown retain'd,
'Till aged Hebi by due heritage it gain'd. Spenser.

11. A rank in the scale or order of being.
How have I then, with whom to hold converse,
Save with the creatures which I make, and those
To me inferior; infinite descents
Beneath what other creatures are to thee. Milton.

12. DESCRIBE. v. a. [describo, Latin.]
1. To mark out any thing by the mention of its properties.
I pray thee, overname them; and as thou nam'st them, I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection. Shakespeare.

- He that writes well in verse will often send his thoughts in search, through all the treasure of words that express any one idea in the same language, that he may comport with the measures, or the rhyme of the verse which he writes, or with his own most beautiful and vivid description of the thing he describes. Watts.

2. To delineate; to mark out; to trace: as, a torch waved about the head describes a circle.

3. To distribute into proper heads or divisions.
Men pass'd through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book. Jos. xviii. 9.

4. To define in a lax manner by the promiscuous mention of qualities general and peculiar. See DESCRIPTION.
DESCRIBER. n. f. [describer, Latin.] He that describes.

- From a plantation and colony of theirs, an island near Spain was by the Greek describers named Erythra. Brown.

- DESCRIBER*. n. f. [describer, Latin.] A discoverer; a detector.
May think his labour vainly gone,
The glad describer shall not miss
To taste the nectar of a kiss. Croftau.

- DESCRIPTION*. n. f. [descriptio, Latin.]
1. The act of describing or making out any person or thing by perceptible properties.

2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.
A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a rove which is too heavy is less an ornament than a burthen. Dryden.

- Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortals'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry,
That run for ever by the muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still. Addison.

3. A lax definition.
This sort of definition, which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect when it is composed of the essential difference, added to general nature or genus. Watts.

4. The qualities expressed in a description.
I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
Be ere a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair. Shakespeare.

5. DESCRY. v. a. [descrio, French.]
1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered; as, the scout descried the enemy, that he gave notice of their approach. This verb is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.

2. To spy out; to examine at a distance.
And the house of Joseph went to descry Bethel. Judges.
Edmund, I think, is gone to descry Shakespeare.

3. To detect; to find out any thing concealed.
Of the king they got a lighter dinner in a gallery, and of the queen mother at her own table; in neither place descried, nor, not by Cadinet, who had been lately ambassador in England. Watson.
N° XXXIX.

4. To discover; to perceive by the eye; to see any thing distant or absent.

- 'Twas desight, into the court he took his way;
Both through the guard, which never him descried,
And through the water-liner, who him never despy'd. Spenser.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath;
What's past and what's to come she can descry. Shakespeare.
'That planet would, unto our eye, *descry*in; only that part whereon the light falls, appear to be horrid, as the moon seems. Raleigh.

- And now their way to earth they had descried,
To Paradise first tending. Milton.
Although the motion of light be not descried, no argument can be made from thence to prove that light is not a body. Di. by en Bodin.

- A tower so high, it seem'd to reach the sky,
Stood on the roof, from whence we could descry
All Illum. Debam;

- Once more at least look back, said I,
Thyself in that large glass descrie. Prior.
DESCRY. n. f. [descrio from the verb.] Discover; thing discovered.

- How near's the other army?
—Near, and on speedy foot, the main descry Shakespeare.
Stands on the hourly thought.

- DESERT*. n. f. [desertum, Latin.] A wilderness; solitude; waste country; uninhabited place.

- Be alive again,
And date me to the desert with thy sword.
Of trembling I inhibit; then protest me
The lady of a girl. Shakespeare.

- He, looking round on every side, beheld
A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades. Milton.

- DESERT*. adj. [desertus, Latin.] Wild; waste; solitary; uninhabited; uncultivated; untill'd.

- I have wor's
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakespeare.

- He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deuteronomy xxxii. 10.

- The promises and bargains between two men in a desert island are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

- To DESERT. v. a. [deserere, French; deserta, Latin.]
2. To forsake; to fall away from; to quit meanly or treacherously.

- I do not remember one man, who heartily wished the passing of that bill, that ever deserted them till the kingdom was in a flame. Dryden.

2. To leave; to abandon.
What is it that builds and keeps them in fixed stations and intervals, against an incessant and inherent tendency to desert them. Bentley.

3. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

- DESERT*. n. f. [desertus, Latin.] The word is originally French. The last couplet; the fruit or sweetmeats with which a feast is concluded. See DESSERT.

- DESERT*. n. f.
1. Qualities or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments; degree of merit or demerit.

- Being of necessity a thing common, it is, through the manifold persuasions, dispositions, and occasions of men, with equal desert both of praise and dispraise, flunped by some, by other desired. Huiler.

- The base of th' mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That lay out on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their fates. Shakespeare.
Use every man after his desert, and who shall scape whipping? Shakespeare.

2. Proportional merit; claim to reward.
Move to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both. Shakespeare.

- All deserts imports an equality between the good conferred and the good deserved, or made due. Swath.

3. Excellence; right to reward; virtue.
DESERTER. n. f. [deserter, Latin.]

1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post.
The members of both houses, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and ousted of their places in parliament. King's Character.

- Straight to their ancient calls, recall'd from arms,
The reconcil'd deserters will repair. Dryden.

- Hof's of deserters, who your honour sold,
And safely broke your faith for bribes of gold. Dryden.

2. He that leaves the army in which he is enlisted.
6 R They

They are the same desertors, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemy.

Deceit of Piety.
A deserter, who came out of the citadel, says the garrison is brought to the utmost necessity.

3. He that forsakes another; an abandoner.
The fair sex, if they had the deserter in their power, would certainly have shewn him more mercy than the Bacchanals did Orpheus.

Thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood.

DESERTION, n. f. [fr. m. desert.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.
Every compliance that we are persuaded to by one, is a contradiction to the commands of the other; and our adherence to one will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other.

3. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency; a sense of the dereliction of God; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.
Christ hears and sympathizes with the spiritual agonies of a soul under desertion, or the pressures of some lingering affliction.

DESERITLESS, adj. [fr. m. desert.] Without merit; without claim to favour or reward.

She said the lov'd;
Lov'd me deseritless, who, with flame, confess
Another flame had seiz'd upon my breast.

TO DESERVE, v. a. [fr. deservir, French.]

1. To be worthy of either good or ill.

Those they honoured, as having power to work or cease,
as men deserv'd of them.

Some of us love you well; and ev'n those some Envy your great deservings, and good name.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all fees
The cup of their deservings.

What he deserv'd of you and me I know.

Yet well, if here would end
The misery: I deserv'd it, and would bear
My own deservings.

Courts are the places where best manners flourish,
Where the deserving ought to rise.

A mother cannot give him death; though he Deserv'd it, he deserv'd it not from me.

Since my Orazia's death I have not seen
A beauty so deserving to be queen.

He had been a person of great deservings from the republick, was an admirable speaker, and very popular.

2. To be worthy of reward.

According to the rule of natural justice one man may merit and deserve of another.

DISSEVERELY, adv. [from deserv.] Worthily; according to desert, whether of good or evil.

For him I was not sent, nor yet to free
That people victor once, now vile and base,
Disseverely made vassal.

A man disseverely cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert.

DISSEVERER, n. f. [from deserv.] A man who merits rewards.
It is well, I think, only in a good sense.

There love is never link'd to the deserver,

Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation;
or otherwise great deservers do perchance grow intolerable preferments.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deserver.

DESICCANTS, n. f. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of forces; driers.

This, in the beginnings, may be prevented by desiccants, and waited.

TO DESICCATE, v. a. [fr. desicco, Latin.] To dry up; to exhale moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it, the air with time, get-ch into the pores.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine helpeth to digest and desiccate the moisture.

Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun.

DESICCATION, n. f. [from desiccate.] The act of making dry;
the state of being dried.

If the spirits issue out of the body, there followeth desiccation, induration, and consumption; as in brick, evaporation of bodies liquid, &c.

DESICCATIVE, adj. [from desiccate.] That which has the power of drying.

TO DESPERATE, v. a. [fr. desperare, Latin.] To want; to miss;
to desire in absence. A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desperated problem.

DESIGNOR, adj. [fr. designatus, Lat.] Idle; lazy; heavy.

TO DESIGN, v. a. [fr. designare, Latin; designer, French.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose; with fer.

The acts of religious worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgment of a Being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we.

You are not for obscurity design'd.

But, like the sun, much cheer all human kind.

3. To devote intentionally; with te.

One of those places was designed by the old man to his son.

He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune; he was designed to the study of the law.

4. To plan; to project; to form an idea.

We are to observe whether it be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well designed; then, whether it be well coloured, which be the two general heads.

Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs

The new elected seat, and draws the line.

5. To mark out.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs.

DESIGN, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An intention; a purpose.

2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life?

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A sedate settled design upon another man's life puts him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek medals one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes.

Thy hand strikes out some new designs,

Where life awakes and dawns at every line.

DESIGNABLE, adj. [fr. designare, Latin.] Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited: the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant.

DESIGNATION, n. f. [fr. designatus, Latin.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plain designation of the duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marie, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a titulary pretence, grounded upon the will and designation of Edward the Confessor.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution.

DESIGNEDLY, adv. [from designare.] Purposely; intentionally;
by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadvertently; not fortuitously.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put them in pain;
but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour.

Utes made things; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to.

RAY of the Creation.

DESIGNER, n. f. [from designare.]

1. A ploter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has th. before always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to contentance and cover their private.

2. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between a designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman metals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy.

DESIGNING, particip. adj. [from designare.] Insidious; treacherous;
deceitful; fraudulently artful.

'T would fawn me poor, indebted, and compell'd,
Designing, mercenary; and I know
You would not wish to think I could be bought.

DESIGNLESS, adj. [from designare.] Without intention; without design; unknowing; inadvertent.

DESIGNLESSLY, adv. [from designare.] Without intention;
ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly confusing voices are as differing as the conditions of the respective fingers.

DESIGNMENT, n. f. [from designare.]

1. A scheme of hostility.

News, lords, our wars are done:

The desperate tempest hath to banish'd the Turks,
That their desirement halts. Shakespeare.

2. A plot; a malicious intention.

She received advice both of the king's desperate estate, and of the duke's desigment against her. Howard.

3. The idea, or sketch of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really fable, but on y painted on boards and canvass; but shall that excuse the ill painter or designer of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his sight;

For though that some mean artist's skill were shown

In mingling colours, or in placing light,

Yet still the fair desigment was his own. Dryden.

DESIRABLE, adj. [from desire.]

1. Pleasing; delightful

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box;
Immediately took the hint, and bought one, being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes. Addison.

Our own feces, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Hutton.

2. That which is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collated by men of great sagacity, will improve his mind, toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought. Hutton.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should find forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of his will. Rever.

DESSERT, n. f. [deser, Fr. deser, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] With; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Drink provoker, and unprovoker; it provokes the desire,
but it takes away the performance. Shakespeare.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind;

It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind. Dryden.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it. Locke.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or else to direct the thought, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

TO DESIRE, v. a. [desirer, French; desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold. Deuteronomy vii. 25.

2. To express wishes; to appear to long.

Jove beheld it with a desiring look. Dryden.

3. To ask; to intreat.

Sir, I intreat you home with me to dinner.

—I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;

I must away this night. Shakespeare.

But since you take such interest in our woes,

And Troy's disastrous end desire to know,

I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell

What in our last and fatal night befell. Dryden.

DESSERTER, n. f. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing;

a wisher.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakespeare.

DESIREOUS, adj. [from desire.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.

The same piety which maketh them that are in authority desireous to please and resemble God by justice, inflameth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hobbes.

Be not desireous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat.

Proverbs xxiii. 3.

Men are drowsy and desireous to sleep before the fit of an ague, and yawn and stretch. Bacon.

Adam the while,

Waiting desireous her return, had wore

Of choicest flowers a garland. Milton.

Conjugal affection,

Prevailing over fear and timorous doubts,

Hath led me on, desirous to behold

Once more thy face. Milton.

DESIREOUSNESS, n. f. [from desireous.] Fulness of desire; eagerness. Ditt.

ardent wishes. Ditt.

TO DESIST, v. n. [desisto, Latin] To cease from any thing;
to stop.

Desist, thou art discern'd,

And toil'st in vain; nor me in vain mislead. Milton.

There are many who will not quit a project, though they find it pernicious or absurd; but will readily desist from it, when they are convinced it is impracticable. Addison.

DESISTANCE, n. f. [from desist.] The act of desisting; cessation.

Men usually give freedom where they have not given before;
and make it both the motive and excuse of their desistance from giving any more, that they have given already. Boyle.

DESISTIVE, adj. [desistens, Latin.] Ending; concluded.

Inceptive and desistive propositions are of this sort: the fogs vanish as the sun rises, but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish; I expect the sun is not yet risen. Hutton.

DESK, n. f. [desch, a table, Dutch.] An instrument for the use of writers or readers made commonly with a box or repousatory under it.

Tell her in the desk,

There is a purse of ducats. Shakespeare.

He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his Bible before him.

Holbein.

I have also been obliged to leave unfinished in my desk the heads of two essays. Pope.

Not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japan'd, avails

To writing of good sense. Swift.

DESOLATE, adj. [desertus, Latin.]

1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.

Let us seek some desolate shade, and there

Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakespeare.

This hero appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Broom.

2. Inhabited by inhabitants; laid waste.

This city shall be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jeremiah.

3. Solitary; without society.

TO DESOLATE, v. a. [desolo, Latin.] To deprive of inhabitants; to lay waste.

The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake, but was desolated by a particular deluge; for earthquake, are feldom in those parts: but, on the other side, they have such pouring rivers, as the rivers of Asia, Africa, and Europe are but brooks to them. Bacon.

Think around

Thunders the front of thick, who with the gun

And dog, impatient bounding as the float,

Worke than the desolation of the fields. Thomson.

DESOLATELY, adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.

DESOLATION, n. f. [from desolate.] Destruction of inhabitants;

savage.

What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great compassion of their calamities. Spenser.

Without her follows to myself a d thee,

Herself, the land, and many a christian soul,

Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakespeare.

To complete

The scene of desolation fit each'd around,

The grim guards stand. Thomson.

2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy.

That dwelling-place is unnatural to mankind; and then the terribleness of the continual motion, the desolation of the far bein; from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it. Sidney.

Then your hope shall be unalter'd, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation. Shakespeare.

My desolation does begin to make

A better life. Shakespeare.

3. A place waste and forsaken.

How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

Jeremiah l. 23.

DESPAIR, n. f. [despair, French.]

1. Hopelessness; dependence; loss of hope.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope, or never discovered it, splot with despair. Sidney.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor. iv. 8.

Weary'd, forsaken, and pursu'd at last,

All safety in despair of safety plac'd,

Courage he thence refuses, resolv'd to bear

All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear. Denn.

Equal their flame, unequal was their care;

One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair. Dryden.

Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works different y in mens minds, sometimes pro-ucing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolence. Locke.

2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.

Strangely visited people,

All swol'n and victrous, pitiful to the eye;

The mere despair of surgery, he cures;

Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,

Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare.

3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.

Are not all our most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremity? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other: may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair? Spence.

TO DESPAIR. v. n. [desper, Latin.] To be without hope; to despair.

Though thou drestest a sword at thy friend, yet despair not; for there may be a turning.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despair of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver.

Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun.

DESPAIRER. n. s. [from despair.] One without hope.

He cheers the fearful, and commands the bold, And makes despairers hope for good success.

DESPAIRFUL. adj. [despair and fall.] Hopeless. Obsolete.

In combating, but two of you will fall; And we rejoice we will despatch you all.

Despatch me quickly, I may death forgive; I shall grow tender else, and with to live.

3. To perform a business quickly; as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.

Therefore commanded he his chariot-man to drive without ceasing, and to despatch the journey, the judgment of God now following him.

No sooner is one action despatched, which, by such a determination as the will, we are set upon, but another uncertainty is ready to fet us on work.

4. To conclude an affair with another.

—They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone.

DESPATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A finished execution; speedy performance.

Afflicted despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be.

You'd see, could you hear inward motions watch, Feigning delay, the wiles for despatch;

'Tis to a woman's meaning would you look, Then read her backward.

The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself.

2. Conduct; management.

This night's great business into my despatch, Which shall, to all our nights and days to come, Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

3. Express; hasty messenger or message; as, despatches were sent away.

DESPATCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.] Done on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with despatchful looks, in haste She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent.

Let one despatchful bid come swain to lead A well fed bullock from the grassy mead.

DESPERATE. adj. [désperatus, Latin.]

1. Without hope.

Since his exile the last desp'd me most; Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,

That I am desp'd at of obtaining her.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant; fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lords, That any Englishman dare give me counsel,

Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure, Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,

And live a subject.

He who goes on without any care or thought of retreating, such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin.

3. Irrecoverable; unreturnable; irrecoverable.

These debts may be well called desperate ones; for a mad man owes them.

In a part of Asia the sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends.

4. Mad; hot-brained; furious.

Were it not the part of a desperate physician to wish his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery?

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predominating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desperate lots and fools, That durst depart from Aristotle's rules.

DESPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]

1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foregone themselves, And desperately are dead.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivilly.

2. In a great degree; violently; this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him, he having withdrawn thither on purpose to avoid her.

DESPERATENESS. n. s. [from desperate.] Madness; fury; precipitancy.

'The going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold thus, the more desperate.

DESPERATION. n. s. [from desperate.] Hopelessness; despair; dependency.

Is all the policy, strength, and defence, That Rome can make against them.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we fin not, because we have sinned.

DESPICABLE. adj. [disparabilis, Latin.] Contemptible; vile; mean; sordid; worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight to vile and despicable as mens disdainful speech would make it.

Their heads as low Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears

Of despicable foes.

All the earth he gave thee to possess and rule, No despicable gift.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in.

DESPICABLENESS. n. s. [from despicable.] Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.

We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service.

DESPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.] Meanly; sordidly; vilely.

Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore, Nor vainly rich, nor desp'd ably poor;

The town in soft solemnities delights, And gentle poets to her arms invites.

DESPICABLE. adj. [from despire.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation.

I am extremely obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old dissipated courier, commonly the most despicable thing in the world.

TO DESPISE. v. a. [despiser, old French, Skinner; dispicis, Latin.]

1. To scorn; to contemn; to slight; to disrespect.

For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despise thee among men.

My sons their old unhappy fire despise, Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes.

2. In civility thus seem't to enup? Or else a rude despiser of good manners,

DESPITE. n. f. [spite, Dutch ; dépit, French.]

1. Malice ; anger ; malignity ; maliciousness ; spleen ; hatred.
Thou wretch ! despite o'erwhelm thee ! Shakespeare.
With men these considerations are usually the causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others ; but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spratt.
2. Defiance.

I he life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done ;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shakspe.
My life thou shalt command ; but not my shame ;
The one my duty owes ; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shakspe.
Know I will serve thee fair in thy despite. Dryden.
I have not quitted yet a victor's right ;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.
Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain ? Blackmore.

Thou, with rebel insolence, did'st dare
To own and to protect that horary ruffian ;
And in despite, ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

3. Act of malice ; act of opposition.
His punishment, eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milton.

To DESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.] To vex ; to affront ;
to give uneasiness to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night, setting the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh.
DESPITEFUL. adj. [despite and full.] Malicious ; full of spleen ; full of hate ; malignant ; mischievous : used both of persons and things.

His taken labours bid him me forgive ;
I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakspe.
Preferre us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Mean while the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known In heav'n. Milton.

DESPITEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.] Maliciously ; ma-lignantly.

It requires us to pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us. Matthew.

DESPITEFULNESS. n. f. [from despiteful.] Malice ; hate ; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness and prove his patience. Wisdome.

DESPITEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious ; furious. A word now out of use.

The knight of the red cross, when him he spy'd
Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen.

To DESPOIL, v. a. [despolio, Latin.]

1. To rob ; to deprive. With of.
Despoil'd of warlike arms, and known shield. Spenser.
You are nobly born,
Despoil'd of your honour in your life. Shakspe.

He waits with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or fend thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliss. Milton.

He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,
Awaits : this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune
Defends not the sad hour. Philips.

DESPOLIATION. n. f. [from despolio, Latin.] The act of despoliing or stripping.

To DESPOND. v. a. [despondeo, Latin.]

1. To despair ; to lose hope ; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling, and not to depend for any miscarriages, or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and depend- ing weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide ; and then, when he have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven with trust and resignation. L'Estrange.

Besides, to change their pasture 'tis in vain,
Or truit to physick : physick is their bane :
The learned leaches in despair, depart,
And shake their heads, depending of their art. Dryden.

Others deprecis their own minds, depend at the first dis-
N° XXXIX.

culty ; and conclude that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice : he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the flesh, and some encourage the depending mind. Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY. n. f. [from despondent.] Despair ; hopelessness ;
desperation.

DESPO'NENT. adj. [despondent, Latin.] Despairing ; hopeless ;
without hope

Congregated thrushes, linnets, sit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock. Thomson.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surpris'd with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world. Brutley.

To DESPO'NSATE. v. a. [desponsa, Latin.] To betroth ; to affiance ; to unite by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DESPO'NSATION. n. f. [from desponsate.] The betrothing persons to each other.

DESPO'NT. n. f. [despōntē.] An absolute prince ; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince ; as the despot of Servia.

DESPO'TICAL. adj. [from despot.] Absolute in power ; unli-mitated in authority ; arbitrary ; unaccountable.

DESPO'TICK. adj. [from despot.] Absolute in power ; unli-mitated in authority ; arbitrary ; unaccountable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lowre. Milton.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power : it had the passions in perfect subjection ; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coercive and despotic law. South.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotic prince, in a state that is most of it composed of rocks and mountains ; for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who flurried up with the harangues of their orators, were now wholly bent upon single and despotic slavery. Swift.

DESPO'TICALNESS. n. f. [from despotic.] Absolute authority.

DE'SPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, French ; from despot.] Absolute power.

To DESPU'MATE. v. n. [despumare, Latin.] To throw off parts in foam ; to froth ; to work.

DESPUMATION. n. f. [from despumate.] The act of throwing off excrementitious parts in foam or foam.

DESPQUAMATION. n. f. [from spuma, Latin.] The act of scaling foul bones.

DESSERT. n. f. [deserte, French.] The last course at an entertainment ; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art
To make a supper with a fine dessert. Dryden.

At your dessert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

To DESTINATE. v. a. [destinare, Latin.] To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Ray.

DESTINATION. n. f. [from destinare.] The purpose for which any thing is appointed ; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, wherein other spirits are a journeying, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way. Glenville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

To DESTINE. v. a. [destine, Latin.]

1. To doom ; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then ?
Say they who counsel war : we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe :
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more ? Milton.

All alters flame ; before each altar lies,
Destin'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice. Dryden.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destined to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbuthnot.

3. To

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or misery.
May heav'n adorn this deslin's head
The choicest of its curls shed.
4. To fix unalterably.
The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r,
From the dark urn shall throw thy deslin'd hour.
DE'STINY. n. f. [deslince, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate of living beings.

- "Thou art neither like thy fire or dam;
But like a soul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the deslinies to be avoided.
2. Fate; invincible necessity.
He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of deslinies,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is ty'd to Jove's eternal seat?
How can hearts, not free, be try'd whether they serve Willing or no, who will but what they must
By deslinies, and can no other clue?
Had thy great desliny but given thee skill
To know, as well as pow'r to act her will.
Chance, or forceful desliny.
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be.
3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' th' morning: thither he
Will come to know his desliny.
DESTITUTE. adj. [deslitutus, Latin.]

1. Forlorn; abandoned.
To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either deslitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure.
He will regard the prayer of the deslitute, and not despise their prayer.
2. In want of.

Living turfs upon his body lay;
This done, securely take the deslin'd way
To find the regions deslitute of day.
Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, deslitute of inhabitants.
DESTITUTE. n. f. [deslitute, Latin.] Want; the state in which something is wanted.

That deslitute in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, 'till it be removed, sufficeth not the mind of man to admit any other care.
They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great deslitute, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them.
The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in deslitute or want of such rules we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship.

To DESTROY. v. a. [desirus, Latin; desruire, French.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a building; to ruin.
The lord will desroy this city.
2. To lay waste; to make desolate.
Solyma sent a great part of his army out of the main unto the island, which burnt and desroyed the country villages.
3. To kill.

A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord desroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead.

'Tis safer to be that which we desroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.
The wise providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock desroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sort of flies desroy spiders.
4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate and incontinent persons desroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.
There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which desroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch.

DESTROYER. n. f. [desroyer, French.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

In all the translations it is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the desroyer was an Assyrian.

For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!

Desroyer rightlier call'd, and slayers of men.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright desroyer lives;

At random wounds, nor knows the wound he gives.

DESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [desirus, Latin.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBILITY. n. f. [desirus, Latin.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTION. n. f. [desirus, Latin.]

1. The act of destroying; waste.
2. Murder; massacre.

'Tis safer to be that which we desroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction.

When that which we immortal thought,
We saw so near destruction brought,
We felt what you did then endure,
And tremble yet, as not secure.

customed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and deslitute, from their former civility and knowledge.

We see in all things how deslitute does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant.

DESULTORY. adj. [desultorius, Latin.] Roving from thing to thing; unmethodical; un-constant.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a deslitute course of life, nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one, to qualify an effectual conversion.

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his deslitute fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and halfmangled notion, and slips away in pursuit of the new game.

Take my deslitute thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and mattered according to art.

DESUME. v. a. [desume, Latin.] To take from any thing;
to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter.

They have left us relations suitable to those of deslitute and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse, though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries.

To DETACH. v. a. [détacher, French.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.

The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it detaches from the uppermost stratum.

Those were assailants in private, but not trusted to manage the affairs in public; for that would detract from the honour of the principal ambassador.

No envy can detract from this: it will shine in history, and, like swans, grow whiter the longer it endures.

DETRACTER. n. f. [from detract.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another injuriously.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied by you, in that I have often heard it questioned, and yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths.

Whether we are so intirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government as you may imagine, their detractors make a question.

Away the fair detractors went,
And gave by turns their censures vent.

DETRACTOR. n. f. [detractor, Latin; detractor, French.] Detraction, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detraction, though pursued by various means.

Even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspoke mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature.

Fame, that her high birth to raise,
Seem'd erst to lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse
Of detraction from her praise.

If detraction could invite us, discretion surely would contain us from any derogatory intention.
To put a stop to the insults and detractions of vain men, I resolved to enter a little farther into the examination.

To consider an author farther, as the subject of obloquy and detraction, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself.

2. A design; a scheme formed; project; speculation.

6 T

Touching the exchange of laws in practice with laws in devices, which they say are better for the state of the church, if they might take place: the farther we examine them, the greater cause we find to conclude, although we continue the same we are, the harm is not great. Hoker.

His device is against Babylon, to destroy it. Jer.
There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless, the counsel of the Lord shall stand. Proverbs.

3. The emblem on a shield; the emblem armorial of a nation or family.

Then change we shields, and their devices bear; Dryden.
Let fraud supply the want of force in war.
Hibernia's harp, device of her command,
And parent of her mirth, shall there be seen. Prior.
They intend to let the world see what party they are of, by figures and designs upon those fans; as the knights-errant use to distinguish themselves by devices on their shields. Adamsen.

4. Invention; genius.
He's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned; full of noble device, of all sorts enchantingly belov'd. Shakespeare.

DEVIL. n. f. [diabolus, Latin.] It is more properly written devil.

1. A fallen angel; the tempter and spiritual enemy of mankind.
Are you a man? Shakespeare.

—Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that which might appal the devil. Shakespeare.

2. A wicked man or woman.

See thyself, devil:
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakespeare.

3. A ludicrous term for mischief.

A war of profit mitigates the evil;
But to be tax'd, and beaten is the devil. Granville.

4. A kind of expletive, expressing wonder or vexation.

The things we know are neither rich nor rare;
But wonder how the devil they got there! Pope.

5. A kind of ludicrous negative in an adverbial sense.

The devil was well, the devil a monk was he. A Proverb.

DEVILISH. adj. [from devil.]

1. Partaking of the qualities of the devil; diabolical; mischievous; malicious; destructive.

Gynecia took a farther conceit of it, mistrusting greatly Cecropia, because she had heard much of the devilish wickedness of her heart. Sidney.

For grief thereof, and devilish despight,
From his infernal furnaces forth he threw Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heav'n's light, Enroll'd in dusky smoke and brimstone blue. Spenser.

In hollow cube
He trains his devilish engine, impal'd
On ev'ry side with shadowy squadrons deep. Milton.

2. Having communication with the devil.

The duchess, by his subordination,
Upon my life began her devilish practices. Shakespeare.

3. An epithet of abhorrence or contempt.

A devilish knave! besides the knave is handsome, young, and blyth: all those requisites are in him that delight. Shakespeare.

DEVILISHLY. adv. [from devilish.] In a manner suiting the devil; diabolically.

'I hose trumpeters threatened them with continual alarms of damnation, if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which wickedly and devilishly those impostors called the cause of God. Sauth.

DEVILKIN. n. f. [from devil.] A little devil.

DEVIOUS. adj. [devius, Latin.]

1. Out of the common track.

Creusa kept behind: by choice we stray
Through every dark and ev'ry devious way. Dryden.

In this minute devious subject I have been necessitated to explain myself in more words, than to some few may seem needful. Holder.

2. Wandering; roving; rambling.

Every muse,
Ad ev'ry blooming pleasure, wait without
To bless the wildly devious morning walk. Thomson.

3. Erring; going astray from rectitude.

One devious step, at first setting out, frequently leads a person into a wilderness of doubt and error. Clarissa.

TO DEVISE. v. a. [deviser, French, as of devisare, to look about. Slinner.]

1. To contrive; to form by art; to invent; to excogitate; to strike out by thought.

Whether they, at their first coming into the land, or afterwards, by trading with other nations which had letters, learned them of them, or devised them among themselves, is very doubtful. Spenser.

He could by his skill draw after him the weight of five thousand bushels of grain, and devise those rare engines which shot small stones at hand, but great ones afar off. Peucham.

Ye sons of art, one curious piece devise,
From whose construction motion shall arise. Blackmore.

2. To plan; to scheme.

Behold I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you. Jer.

TO DEVISE. v. n. To consider; to contrive; to lay plan; to form schemes.

Her merry fit the freshly 'gan to rear,
And did of joy and jollity devise,
Herself to cherrish and her guest to cheer. Spenser.

But fish now safe ye fished have the shore,
And well arrived are, high God be blest,
Let us devise of ease and everlasting rest. Spenser.

Since we are so far entered, let us, I pray you, a little devise of those evils by which that country is held in this wretched case, that it cannot, as you say, be secured. Spenser.

Devise but how you'll use him when he comes, and let us two devise to bring him thither. Shakespeare.

DEVISE. n. f. [deviser, a will, old French.]

1. The act of giving or bequeathing by will.

This word is properly attributed, in our common law, to him that bequeaths his goods by his last will or testament in writing; and the reason is, because those that now appertain only to the devisour, by this act are distributed into many parts. Covent.

The alienation is made by devise in a last will only, and the third part of these profits is there demandable, by special provision thereof made in the statute. Ben.

2. Contrivance. See DEVICE.

God hath omitted nothing needful to his purpose, we left his intention to be accomplished by our devise. Hins.

TO DEVISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To grant by will. A law term.

DEVISER. n. f. [from deviser.] A contriver; an inventor.

Being divided from truth in themselves, they are yet further removed by advenient deception; for true it is, if I say they are daily mocked into error by devisers. Brax.

The authors of useful inventions, the devisers of wholesome laws, as were the philosophers of ancient times, were honoured as the fathers and prophets of their country. Green.

DEVITABLE. adj. [devitabilis, Lat.] Possible to be avoided.

DEVITATION. n. f. [devitatio, Latin.] The act of escaping or avoiding.

DEVOLD. adj. [void, French.]

When I awoke, and found her place devold,
And nought but pressed grass where she had layn,
I sorrow'd all so much as erst I joy'd. Spenser.

2. Without any thing, whether good or evil; free from; in want of.

He hung it from him, and devold of dread,
Upon him lightly leaped without heed. Spenser.

That the soul and angels are devold of quantity and dimension, hath the suffrage of the most; and that they have nothing to do with proper locality, is generally opined. Glen.

The motion of this chariot will still be easier as it ascends higher, till at length it shall become utterly devold of gravity, when the least strength will be able to bestow upon it a firm motion. Wallis.

His warlike mind, his soul devold of fear,
His high designing thoughts were figur'd there,
As when, by magic, ghosts are made appear. Dryden.

We Tyrians are not to devold of sense,
Not so remote from Phœbus' influence. Dryden.

DEVOTER. n. f. [devoir, French.]

1. Service. A service now not used.

To restore again the kingdom of the Mamalukes, he offered him their utmost devoir and service. Kant.

2. Act of civility or obsequiousness.

Aukward and supple, each devoir to pay,
She flatters her good lady twice a day. Pope.

TO DEVOLVE. v. a. [devoles, Latin.]

1. To roll down.

The matter which devolves from the hills down upon the lower grounds, does not considerably raise and augment them. Watson.

Through splendid kingdoms he devolves his maze,
Now wanders wild through solitary tracts
Of life-deserted sand. Thomson.

2. To move from one hand to another.

Because they found too much confusion in such a multitude of statefemen, they devolved their whole authority into the hands of the council of sixty. Alfons.

The whole power, at home and abroad, was devolved upon that family. Swift.

TO DEVOLVE. v. n. To fall in succession into new hands.

Supporting people, by wanting spiritual blessings, did lose all their right to temporal, yet that forfeit must devolve only to the supreme Lord. Ducy of Pary.

DEVOLUTION. n. f. [devolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of rolling down.

What concerns the raising of new mountains, deterrations, or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys from the hills. Wallis.

hills and high grounds, will fall more properly under our consideration on another occasion. Woodward.

2. Removal from hand to hand.
The jurisdiction exercised in those courts is derived from the crown of England, and the last devolution is to the king by way of appeal. Hale.

DEVORATION. n. f. [from devoire, Latin.] The act of devouring. Diell.

TO DEVOTE. v. a. [devoire, devotus, Latin.]

1. To dedicate; to consecrate; to appropriate.
No devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed. Leviticus.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakespeare.

While we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stocks, nor no flocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks,
As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur'd. Shakespeare.

On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.
If persons of this make should ever devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and strong constitution of body. Watts.

2. To addict; to give up to ill.
Aliens were devoted to their rapine and despoil. D. of Piety.
Having once debauched their senses with the pleasures of others, they devoted themselves unto all wickedness. Grew.
Ah why, Penelope, this cautious fear,
To render sleep's soft blessings insincere?
Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme,
The day reflection, and the midnight dream. Pope.

3. To curse; to execrate; to doom to destruction.
Yet not for thy advice, or threats, I fly
Those wicked tents devoted; lest the wrath
Impendent, raging into sudden flame, Distinguish not. Milton.

To destruction sacred, and devote,
He with his whole posterity must die.
Goddess of maids, and conscious of thy hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted illue felt,
When, hissing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden.

Let her, like me, of ev'ry joy forlorn,
Devote the hour when such a wretch was born:
Like me to desert and to darkness run. Rowe.
DEVOTEDNESS. n. f. [from devote.] The state of being devoted or dedicated.

Whatever may fall from my pen to her disadvantage, relates to her but as the wall, or may again be, an obstacle to your devotedness to seraphic love. Boyle.
The owning of our obligation unto virtue, may be styled natural religion; it is to say, a devotedness unto God, our liege Lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Grew.

DEVOTE'S. n. f. [devot, French.] One erroneously or superstitiously religious; a bigot.

DEVOTION. n. f. [devotion, French; devotus, Latin.]

1. The state of being consecrated or dedicated.

2. Piety; acts of religion.
Mean time her warlike brother on the seas
His waving streamers to the winds displays,
And vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryd.

3. An act of external worship.
Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion. Hester.

For as I passed by and beheld your devotion, I found an altar
With this inscription, To the unknown God. Adi.

In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotion he to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.
An aged holy man,
That day and night laid his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply. Spenser.

Your devotion has its opportunity: we must pray always,
but chiefly at certain times. Spratt.

5. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependance upon God.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Defends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton.

From the full choir, when loud Hosanna's rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n. Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayer, at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises. Law.

6. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.
Whether away so fast?
—No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare.

7. Strong affection; ardent love; such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.
Be opposite, all planets of good luck,
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter. Shaksf.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king, and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education. Clarendon.

8. Disposal; power; state of dependance on any one.
Arundel-castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion. Clarendon.

DEVOTIONAL. adj. [from devotion.] Pertaining to devotion; annexed to worship; religious.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of heart, which I desire to bear in holy offices, to be performed with me. King Charles.
The favourable opinion and good word of men comes often times at a very easy rate, by a few demure looks, with some devotional postures and grimaces. South.

DEVOTIONALITY. n. f. [from devotion.] A man zealous without knowledge; superstitiously devout.

TO DEVOUR. v. a. [devoire, Latin.]

1. To eat up ravenously, as a wild beast or animal of prey.
We will say some evil beast hath devoured him. Genesi.
We've willing dames enough: there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it to incline. Shakespeare.

So looks the pent up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws. Shakespeare.
2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.
A fire devour'd before them, and behind them a flame burneth. Jed.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd;
It was the waste of war.
Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection. Dryden.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.
He seemed in swiftness to devour the way. Shakespeare.

Such a pleasure as grows frether upon enjoyment, and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured. South.
Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour. Dryden.

DEVOURER. n. f. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tigers;
Tigers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou then,
From these devourers to be banished? Shakespeare.
Since those Leviathans are withdrawn, the lessers devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence. Dryden.
Store the pond with carp and tench, which do the best together of any fish, all other fish being devourers of their spawn. Mortimer.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

2. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.
We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour. Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.
For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode. Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.
Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark
The ancient lion descends, with all his train:
Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
Grateful to heav'n. Milton.

DEVOUTLY. adj. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces
Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and, saint-like,
Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly. Shaksf.
One of the wise men of the society of Solomon's house, having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face.
Her twilight were more clear than our mid-day,
She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray;
Who being here fill'd with grace, yet flurvy to be Both

Both where more grace and more capacity
At once is given.

Think, O my soul, dewy think,
How, with affrighted eyes,
Thou saw'st the wide extended deep
In all its horrors rise!

To second causes we seem to trust, without expressions, so dewy as we ought to do, our dependance on the first. Attrib.
DEUSE. n. f. [more properly than dæmō, Tamini, from Uisus, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well, the dæmō take me if I ha'n't forgot it;
DEUTEROGAMY. n. f. [deutis and γάμος.] A second marriage.

DEUTERONOMY. n. f. [deutis and νόμος.] The second book of the law, being one of the books of Moses.

DEUTEROSCOPY. n. f. [deutis and σκοπία.] The second intention; the meaning beyond the literal sense.

Not attaining the dewy of, or second intention of the words, they are said to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEW. n. f. [beap, Saxon; daauw, Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs, particularly those which we frequently observe after fun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour, consisting of water, and of such mineral matter as it meets with in its passage, and could well bring up along with it; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not different, as now it is; because the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air 'till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools and refreshes, after the scorching heat of the foregoing day.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep;
But with his tin'rous dreams was still awak'd. Shakef.
That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakef.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakef.
Dew and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed. Bacon.

Now sliding streams: the thirly plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.
To Dew. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm moist sovereign,
And dainty dew, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dew been with timely rain. Spenser.

Be we the medicine of the feckly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge,
Each drop of us.

— Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shak.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears. Shakef.
He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words, which thefe he breath'd. Milton.

Palemon above the rest appears,
In fable garments, dew'd with gushing tears.
2. It is not used properly of an action of terror.

In Gallick blood again
He dew's his recking sword, and flows the ground
With headless ranks. Philips.

DEWBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]
Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean raspberries, which are also of the bramble kind. Hanner.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries. Shakef.

DEWBESPRENT. part. [dew and besprent.] Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dewbesprent, and were in fold,
I fat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With haunting honey-luckie. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

DEWDROP. n. f. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sun-rise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in ev'ry cowlip's ear. Shakef.

An host
Innumerable! as the stars of night,
Or flares of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impels! on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r.

Red, sweet as dewdrops on their flow'ry lawns,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns! Ti. ell.

DEW-LAP. n. f. [from lapping or licking the dew.]
1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.
Large rowles of fat about his shoulders flung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung.

Adijon's Ovid; Metamorphoses.
2. It is used in Shakef. for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale. Shakef.

DEW-LAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furnished with dewlaps,
Who would believe, that there were mountaineers
Dewlapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh. Shakef.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning low ferments in ev'ry vein. Gey.

DEW-WORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew-worm, which some call the lob-worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walm.

DEWY. adj. [from dew.]
1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine Roars stormy. Philips.

2. Moist with dew; soiled.
The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone, 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red. Spenser.

'T he bee with iron'd thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such comfort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton.

His dewy locks distill'd Ambrosia. Milton.

His own Prænit sends a chosen band,
With those who plough Saturnia's Gabine land;
Besides the succour which cold Aonian yields,
The rocks of Hærnicus and dewy fields. Dryden.

used in heraldry.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this finitior Bounds in my fire's. Shakef.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Latin.]
1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. Smith.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]
1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready; as, a dexterous workman.

They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner, with which they content themselves. La. la.

DEXTEROUSLY. adj. [from dexterous.] Expertly; skillfully;
artfully.

The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister. Smith.

But then my study was — cog'tie dice,
And dexterously to throw the lucky dice. Dryden.

As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it difficult its virtue by meer irradiation, but by its vein and proper vessels. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If there were a determinate propensity in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differentiated by dexterity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIABETES, n. f. [diabētes, Lat.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, heftick sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions. Derham.

DIABOLICAL, adj. [from diabolus, Lat.] Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; malicious; pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,

Doubt not but beget of diabolick power,
Active within, beyond the fence of brute. Milton.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affliction of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and nature, and upon the common well-being of mankind? L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Roy.

Damned spirit must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share th' misery. Atterbury.

DIACOIDUM, n. f. [Latin.] The fennel of poppies.

DIACOUTICK, n. f. [diacoutick.] The doctrine of founds.

DIADHEM, n. f. [diadēma, Latin.]

1. A tiara; an emblem of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe dyed with many a wound. Spenser.

A little the coblers temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadema,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

Golden in flower, it-bud a wreath of thorn;
Brings down to troubles, cares, a d' sleepless nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.

Why should he ravish th' diadem
From your grey temple, which the hand of time
Must shortly pant on his. Denham.

Let him, that once made diadems her prey,
And flung our prince in his triumphant way,
Find like a milt before this radiant day. Reynolds.

DIADYM, adj. [from diadema] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadym'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,
Her priesticks make forbids the good to die,
And upes the temple of eternity. Pope.

DIADROM, n. f. [from diadromos.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a phil sophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadrom, in the latitude of forty five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtith of a minute. Lute.

DIAPHRASIS, n. f. [diaphrasis.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as air.

DIAGNOSTICK, n. f. [from diagnostikos.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down ten indispensable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house;—let us hear your diagnosticks. Carter.

One of our physicians pined disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks. Harvey.

DIAGONAL, adj. [from diagonalis.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monotropy of the badger is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed into the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This, and all like sorts of florid that are composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally, and parallel to the side of the strata. Hutton.

DIAGONAL, n. f. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Lute.

DIA'AGONALLY, adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptance, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or d'agonal, unto the other; but were distinguished, according unto their activity and pre-eminant locomotion, on the either side. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DI'AGRAM, n. f. [from diagramma.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair piece in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematics; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanic operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of the cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley's Sermons.

DIAGRY'DIATES, n. f. [from diagrydium, Latin.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All ch'rick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder. Feyer.

DIAL, n. f. [diālis, Sinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shews the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
To spend that thoutest, hasty were too long,
Though life did ride upon a diā's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour. Shakespeare.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone. Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE, n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

He tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of one of these needles, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Adams.

DIALECT, n. f. [diālektikē.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, &c. dialects.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialct; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting. Hobbes.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialct,
Such as moves men. Shakespeare.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person, upon whom it was conferred, to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialct of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South.

DIALECTICAL, adj. [from dialectikē.] Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties that the scholasticks too often employ about physiological mysteries, are wont much more to declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth. Locke.

DIAL'CTICK, n. f. [from dialctikos.] Logic; the art of reasoning.

D'ALLING, n. f. [from dial.] The feisterick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may shew the hour.

D'ALIST, n. f. [from dial.] A contrivance of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Mason.

DIA'LOGUE, n. f. [from dialogos.] A speaker in a dialogue of conference; a writer of dialogues.

D'ALOGUE, n. f. [from dialogos.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckoo? Shakespeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked fox! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise;
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise. Dryden.

D'ALOGUE, v. a. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to confer.

D'ill dialogue with thy shadow? Shakespeare.

DIALYSIS, n. f. [from dialysis.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.

DIAMETER, n. f. [from dios and metron.] The line which, passing through the center of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy and Alfragan, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Rabrich.

The

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter.

DIA'METRAL. adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIA'METRICALLY. adv. [from diameter.] According to the direction of a diameter.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to profaneness and impurity of actions. Hannibal.

DIA'METRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves.

DIA'METRICALLY. adv. [from diameter.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security. Clarendon.

When it is thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it. H. Edwards.

DIA'MOND. n. f. [diamant, French; adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear, and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendor, and the brightness of its reflexions. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger one extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fire, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fierce of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass-house fire for many days, and, if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Braills; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles. Hall.

This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;

But keep it till you woo another wife. Shakespeare.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;

Or, for the diamond, the chain you promised. Shakespeare.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow. Shakespeare.

The diamond is preëminent and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty; as a stone in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other stone. H. Edwards.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,

Fair as the star that utters in the morn. Blackmore.

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,

Collected light, compact. Thomson.

DIA'PASE. n. f. [διαπάση.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,

Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;

Nine was the circle set in heav'n's place,

All which compacted made a good diapose. Spenser.

The sweet numbers and melodious measures,

With which I wont the wing'd words to tie,

And make a tuneful diapose of pleasures,

Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIA'PASON. n. f. [διαπάση.]

Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with what we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same sound. Lacum.

Harsh din

Broke the fair music that all creatures made

To thy great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood

In hush obedience, and their state of good, Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,

A full-mouth'd diapason swallows all, Crafton.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,

This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DI'APER. n. f. [diapre, French; of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures.

Not any damask, which her vaunted moit

In skillful knitting of soft liken twine;

Nor any weaver, which his work doth boult

In diaper, in damask, or in linc,

Wight in their live se cunning ever dare

With this so curious net-work to compare. Spenser.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin

Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;

Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shakespeare.

TO DI'APER. v. a. [from te noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,

The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,

And diaper'd like the discoloured mead. Spenser.

Flora useth to cloath our grand-dame earth with a new livery, diaper'd with various flowers, and chequered with deli-hious objects. Hind.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Pachon.

DIAPHANITY. n. f. [from διαφανεια.] Transparency; pellucidity; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphanity; therefore are the eyelids so contrived as when to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Key on the Creation.

DIAPHANICK. adj. [δια and φανος.] Transparent; pellucid, having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtle, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created, easily transpires. Kalcepli's History of the World.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [δια and φανος.] Transparent; clear;

translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent, or cleaving to a diaphanous body. Ralph.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Rea.

DIAPHORETICK. adj. [διαφωρητικος.] Sudorific; promoting a diaphoresis or perspiration; causing sweat.

Diaphoretick, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digest on, because the attenuation of the aliment make it perspirable. Arbucut.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorifick, is something that will provoke sweating. Watts.

DI'APHIRAGM. n. f. [διαφύραγμα.]

1. The nudrix which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of bodies, round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms, thick set throughout the whole length of the body. Wichard.

DIARRHOEA. n. f. [διαρροια.] A flux of the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restraining the bowels. Boerhaave.

During his diarrhoea I healed up the fontanelle. Boerhaave.

DIARRHOETICK. adj. [from diarrhoea.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solutive; purgative.

Millet is diarrhetic, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbucut.

DI'ARY. n. f. [diarium, Lat.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observation of every day; a journal.

In sea-voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but in land-travel, wherein much is to be observed, they omit it. Baron.

I go on in my intended diary. Taylor.

DIA'STOLE. n. f. [διαστολη.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, by which a short syllable is made long.

2. The dilation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural state.

Ray on the Creation.

DIA'STYLE. n. f. [δια and στύλος, a pillar.] A sort of edifice, where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for inter-columniation. Harris.

DIATE'SERON. n. f. [of δια and τεσσαρα, four.] An interval in music, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semi-tone; its proportion being as four to three.

It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATONICK. [of διατονικος.] The ordinary sort of music which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending.

defending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semi-tone.

DIAPHANETIC TONE. [of δια and ζῳον] In the ancient Greek music, disjoined two fourths, one on each side of it; and which being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our music, from A to B.

They allowed to this diaphanetic tone, which is our I, 3, 5, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth.

DIGGLE. n. f. [from diggle, Dutch, a sharp point, Skinner; from diggle, Janin.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

DICACITY. n. f. [dicacia, Lat.] Pertinacity, cunning. DISTONE. n. f. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise who's hours together, and take abundance of pains to be expert at diggloze, as they call it.

DICE. n. f. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice; now, after you have cast all the trials but one, it is still as much odds as the last remaining time, as it was at the first.

TO DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuously given as a gentleman used to be; virtuous enough; swore little; did not above seven times a week; I went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter of an hour.

DICE-BOW. n. f. [die and bow.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a die-box?

DICER. n. f. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gameller.

As false as dicers oaths. DICH. adj. This word seems corrupted from dit lot do it.

Rich men sin, and I eat root: Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus. DICTATION. n. f. [δῆξιν, Gr.] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affestation of dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. DICKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock? —I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial sum? But han't you found it, sir?

DICHER. [dicier, n. f. [dicier, low Latin] Ten hides. DICT. DICTATE. v. a. [dicere, Latin.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay; And studded amber darts a golden ray; Such, and not nobler, in the temples above, My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove.

Whatever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance.

DICTATE. n. f. [dictatum, Latin.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; precept.

Others call about for new discoveries, and to seek in their own thoughts for those right helps of art which will scarce be found, I fear, by those who servilely confine themselves to the dictates of others.

I credit what the Grecian dictates say, And Samian sounds o'er Scotia's hills convey.

Then let this dictate of my love prevail; Infant, to foreign realms prepare to fail, To learn your father's fortunes.

DICTATUM. n. f. [from dicere] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing.

DICTATOR. n. f. [Latin] 1. A magistrate of Rome made in times of exigence and distress, and invested with absolute authority.

Kind dictator made, when they came home, Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome.

Julius with honour tam'd Rome's foreign foes; But patriot tell, ere the dictator rule.

2. One invested with absolute authority. Unanimous they all commit the care, And management of this main enterprise, To him their great dictator.

3. One whose credit or authority enables him to direct the conduct or opinion of others.

Not is it a small power it gives one man over another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths.

That riches, honours, and outward splendour, should set up persons for dictators to all the rest of mankind, is a most shameful invasion of the right of our understanding.

DICTATORIAL. adj. [from dictator.] Authoritative; confident; dogmatical; overbearing.

A young academick often dwells upon a journal, or an observatory that treats of trade and politics in a dictatorial stile, and is lavish in the praise of the author.

DICTATORSHIP. n. f. [from dictator.] 1. The office of dictator.

This is the solemnest title they can confer under the prince-dom, being indeed a kind of dictatorship.

2. Authority; injunct confidence. This is that perpetual dictatorship which is exercised by Lucretius, though often in the wrong.

DICTATURY. n. f. [dictatura, Latin] The office of a dictator; dictatorship.

DICTION. n. f. [dictio, French; dictio, Latin.] S'ie; language; explication.

There appears in every part of his diction, or expression, a kind of noble and bold purity.

DICTIONARY. n. f. [diccionarium, Latin] A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order, with explanations of their meaning; a lexicon; a vocabulary; a word-book.

Some have delivered the poetry of spirits, and left an account that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations; that they are afraid of letters and characters, notes and daffies, which, set together, do signify nothing; and not only in the dictionary of man, but in the fabled vocabulary of Satan.

Is it such a horrible fault to translate similes? I see what a good thing it is to have a good catholic dictionary.

An army, or a parliament, is a collection of men; a dictionary, or nomenclature, is a collection of words.

DID. [of do; did, Saxon.] 1. The preterite of do.

Thou canst not say I did it. What did that great: is in a woman's mind?

2. The first of the preter-imperfect tense, or perfect. Ill lodg'd and weak to act what it defind.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand, Or rail at arts he did not understand?

3. It is sometimes used emphatically; as, I did really love him. DIDACTICAL. adj. [didacticus.] Preceptive; giving pre-

DIDACTICK. cepis: as a didactic poem is a poem that gives rules for some art; as the Georgicks.

The means used to this purpose are partly didactical, and partly preceptual, demonstrating the truth of the gospel; and then urging the professors of those truths to be steadfast in the faith, and to beware of infidelity.

DIDAPPER. n. f. [from di.] A bird that dives into the water. DIDASCALICK. adj. [didascalicus.] Preceptive; didactic; giving precepts in some art.

I found it necessary to form some story, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what species it may be comprehended, whether didascalick or heroic, I leave to the judgment of the critics.

TO DIDDLE. v. a. [didern, Teut. zittern, Germ.] To quake with cold; to shiver. A provincial word. DIDST. The second person of the preter tense of do. See DID.

Oh halt and beth of Scots! who didst maintain Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign.

TO DIE. v. a. [bezo, Sax. a colour.] To tinge; to colour; to stain.

So much of death her thoughts Had entertain'd, as dy'd her cheeks with pale.

All white, a virgin faint the fought the skies; For marriage, though it fulfies not, it dies.

DYE. n. f. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; stain; dye acquired.

It will help me nothing To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me Which makes my white part black.

We have dainty woks of feathers of wonderful lustre, excellent dyes, and many.

DYEING. we see emerges into light, And shining suns descend to table night: Ev'n heav'n itself receives another dye.

When weary'd animals in slumbers lie Of midnight ease; another, when the grey Of morn precludes the splendor of the day.

It is very surprising to see the images of the mind stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the dye of the passions, and appear in all the colours and complexions of thought.

First this She sends on earth; then that of deeper air Steals soft behind.

75 DIE. v. n. [Seabian, Saxon.]

1. To lose life; to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou dost kill me with thy unkind falsehood; and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murderer.

Sidney.

Nor did the third his conquests long survive,
Dying ere scarce he had begun to live.

Addison.

Oh let me live my own, and die too!

Pope.

To live and die is all I have to do.

2. To perish by violence or disease.

The Dira only served to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat.

Dryden.

Talk not of life or ransom, he replies;
Patroclus dead, whoever meets my dies:

In vain a single Trojan faces for grace;
But least the fons of Priam's hateful race:

Dies then, my friend! what boots it to deplore!

The great, the good Patroclus is no more!

He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;

And thou, dost thou bewail mortality!

Pope.

3. It has by before an instrument of death.

4. Of before a disease.

They often come into the world clear, and with the appearance of sound bodies; which, notwithstanding, have been infected with disease, and have died of it, or at least have been very infirm.

Wifeham.

5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a positive cause.

At first the startles, then the stands amaz'd;
At last with terror the from thence doth fly,

And loaths the wat'ry gas wherein the gaz'd,
And thus it still, although for thirst the dies.

Davies.

He in the loaden vineyard dies for thirst.

Hipparchus, being passionately fond of his own wife, who was enamoured of Bathyllus, leaped and died of his fall.

Addison.

6. To be punished with death.

If I dies for it, as no life is threatened me, the king my old master must be reliev'd.

Shakespeare.

What is the love of our neighbour?

—The valuing him as the image of God, one for whom Christ dies.

Hemmond.

7. To be lost; to perish; to come to nothing.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone?

Of fortieft fancies your companion making,
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died

Shakespeare.

With them they think on.

If any sovereignty, an account of his property, had been vested in Adam, which in truth there was not, it would have died with him.

Lact.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in spreading whispers, he will find greater satisfaction by letting the secret die within his own breast.

Spectator.

8. To sink; to faint.

His heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

Samuel.

9. [In theology.] To perish everlastingly.

So long as God shall live, so long shall the damned die.

Halewell on Providence.

10. To languish with pleasure or tenderness.

To founts of heav'nly harps the dies away,
And melts in visions of eternal day.

Pope.

11. To vanish.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dies clouds contend with growing light.

Shakespeare.

The smaller stains and blemishes may die away and disappear, amidst the brightness that surrounds them; but a blot of a deeper nature casts a shade on all the other beauties, and darkens the whole character.

Addison.

12. [In the file of lovers.] To languish with affection.

The young men acknowledged in love-letters, that they died for Rebecca.

Tatler, N^o 110.

13. To wither as a vegetable.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and dies, it abideth alone; but if it dies, it bringeth forth much fruit.

John xii. 25.

14. To grow rapid, as liquor.

DIE. n. f. pl. dies. [de, French; dies, Welsh.]

1. A small cube, marked on its faces with numbers from one to six, which gamblers throw in play.

Keep a gamester from the dies, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Shakespeare.

I have fet my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the dies.

Shakespeare.

He knows which way the lot and the dies shall fall, as perfectly as if they were already cast.

Smith.

2. Hazard; chance.

Edgemoon his cruel hand Sir Guyon staid,
Temp'ring the passion with advisement slow,
And must'ring might on enemy dismay'd;

Spenser.

For th' equal dies of war he well did know.

So loth to battle fierce arranged are;

In which his harder fortune was to fall

Under my spear: such is the dies of war.

Spenser.

Thine is th' adventure, thine the victory:

Well has thy fortune turn'd the dies for thee.

Dryden.

3. Any cubic body.

DIE. n. f. pl. dies. The stamp used in coinage.

The fleece, that has been by the dies stain'd,

Never again its native whiteness gain'd.

Waller.

There were some of very low rank and professions, who acquired great estates; cobblers, dies, and shoemakers gave publick shows to the people.

Addison.

DIE. n. f. [diet, low Latin; dieta.]

1. Food; provisions for the mouth; victuals.

I have cared for no other delicacy of fate, or curiosity of dies, than to maintain life.

Raleigh.

Time may come, when men

With angels may participate; and find

No inconvenient dies, nor too light fare.

Shelton.

No part of dies, in any season, is so healthful, so natural, and so agreeable to the stomach, as good and well-ripened fruits.

Temple.

Milk appears to be a proper dies for human bodies, where acrimony is to be purged or avoided; but not so proper where the canals are obstructed, it being void of all saline quality.

di.

2. Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I commend rather some dies for certain seasons, than frequent use of physick; for those dies alter the body more, and trouble it less.

Bacon.

I restrained myself to so regular a dies, as to eat flesh but once a day, and little at a time, without salt or vinegar.

Temple.

3. DIE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.

She dies him with fasting every day,
The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,

And made him pray both early and eke late.

Spenser.

Shew a while like fearful war,
To dies rank mists full of happiness,

And purge th' obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life.

Shakespeare.

He was not taken well; he had not died;
The veins unsill'd, our blood is cold; and then

We point upon the morning, are unapt;
To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd

These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls

Than in our priestlike fasts; therefore I'll watch him
Till he be died to my request.

Shakespeare.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his fancies; for it is my office.

Shakespeare.

Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the terrible burden ease,

Till died by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gale, who all things know.

Alford.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have died a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food.

Smith.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to dies my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor

Hath leapt into my seat

Shakespeare.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetic caution, and such as, without a journey to Æsculapius, culinary prescription might have afforded. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

This book was received by the publick with the respect that was due to the importance of its contents: it became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetic philosophy. Arbutnot.

To DIFFER. v. n. [differs, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have properties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, wont discern

What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,

Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addison.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbutnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man that is of judgment and understanding shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which do differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon.

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments. Addison.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment sit;

We'll never differ with a crowded pit. Rousseau.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments. Buquet.

DIFFERENCE. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus born alike, from virtue first began

The difference that distinguish'd man from man:

He claim'd no title from descent of blood,

But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes, under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakespeare.

Oh the strange difference of man and man!

To thee a woman's services are due;

My fool usurps my body. Shakespeare.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practis'd to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil. Hayward.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?

—It was a contention in publick. Shakespeare.

He is weary of his life that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Sandy.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution, under a good administration, does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison.

Nothing could have fallen out more un luckily than that there should be such differences among them, about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillot.

6. Point in question; ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the difference,

That holds this present question in the court? Shakspeare.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference, and commonly, by assuming men with a subtilty, blanch the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Davies.

To DIFFERENCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

Moss are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs, which are commonly observed, and are differed by other concurrent causes. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Grass differeth a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness. Roy.

N° XL.

We see nothing that differs the courage of Mneitheus from that of Sergesthus. Pope.

DIFFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison.

2. Of many contrary qualities.

The Britons change Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air, And other climes, where different food and soil Portend disempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden.

DIFFERENTIAL. Math. is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetic of fluxions; about the invention of which there has been a contest between Leibnitz and Sir Isaac Newton. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind (soever they be): and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DIFFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by a person of an ordinary genius. Addison's Spectator.

DIFFERENTLY. adv. [from differing.] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may renit the light so differently, as to vary a colour. Eyre.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvious. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficult apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glanville.

Latin was not more difficult,

Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle. Hu'tches.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficult in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit towards him; so that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFICULTY. n. f. [from difficult.] Difficulty to be persuaded; incomppliance; impracticability.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crolliness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or disservice, or the like; but the deeper sort, to envy and more mischief. Bacon.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not easy; not facile.

It is difficult in the eyes of this people. Zachar.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

DIFFICULTY. adv. [from difficult.] Hardly; with difficulty.

A man who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficulty be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers.

DIFFICULTY. n. f. [from difficult; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention to the discharge of it. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities: a pernicious mistake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, till their convictions do them no good. South.

3. Diffress; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat:

Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie at present under some difficulties, by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden the importation of their manufactures. Addison.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

To DIFFIDE. v. n. [diffido, Latin.] To distrust; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear:

The man diffides in his own augury,

And doubts the gods. Dryden.

DIFFI-

DIFFIDENCE. n. f. [from diffide.] Distrust; want of confidence; timidity.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon.

You have brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver. Milton.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence, arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.
Whatever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence, left possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DIFFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.] Not confident; not certain; distrustful.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brutally to submit to any man's dictates. K. Charles.

Be not diffident
Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou
Dismis'st her, when most thou need'st her nigh. Milton.
I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.
Pliny speaks of the Seres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbuthnot.

Diffide makes the humble heart diffident.
TO DIFFIND. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.] To cleave in two; to split. Clarke.

DISSISION. n. f. [diffissio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting. DiD.

DIFFLATION. n. f. [diffillare, Latin.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind. DiD.

DI'FLUENCE. n. f. [from diffus, Latin.] The quality of di'fluency; falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquires no new form; but rather a consistence or determination of its *diffus*ion, and omitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Er. cur.

DI'FLUENT. adj. [diffuens, Latin.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

DI'FORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular; as a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or tortuous position of the pores of glass. Newton.

DIFORMITY. n. f. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present dispose of things, they rest not in their established natures; but desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind, that formed all things best. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIFFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [franchise, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

TO DIFFUSE. v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Wisdom had ordain'd
Good out of evil to create; instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.
No less wants its apoplex to propagate and diffuse it. Deacy of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,
Whole race shall bear aloft the Latian name,
And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

DIFFUSE. adj. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

DIFFUSED. participial adj. [from diffuse.] This word seems to have signified, in Shakspeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once,
With some diffused long. Shakspeare.
He grows like savages,

To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd of wit,

And every thing that seems unnatural. Shakspeare.

DIFFUSEDLY. adv. [from diffused.] Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSEDNESS. n. f. [from diffused.] The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFUSELY. adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural History.

A sheet of very well streaked marbled paper did not cut distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unstained and bright, to that and that part of the wall. Boyd.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

DIFFUSIVE. adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusor of themselves, where-e'er they pass
They make that warmth in others they expect:
Their valour works like bodies on a glass,
And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

No man is so of so general and diffusor a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mists,
And upward flit, and kindle as they pass,
And with diffusor light adorn their heavenly place. Dryden.

Cheerful'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows;
Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,
And round the happy soil diffusor odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended; in full extension.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusor body of Christians. Talbot.

DIFFUSIVELY. adv. [from diffusor.] Widely; extensively; every way.

DIFFUSIVENESS. n. f. [from diffusor.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole fable of a metal overrun with it. Addison.

TO DIG. v. a. preter. dug, or digged; part. pass. dug, or digged. [dic, Saxon, a ditch; giger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezek. vii. 8.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mure that you have digged by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Hierem.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; but he had much cattle. 2 Chron. xxxi. 10.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Taylor.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn

The branches lop. Dryden.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A ravenous vulture in his open'd side,
Her crooked beak and cruel talons try'd;
Still for the growing liver digged his beak,
The growing liver still supply'd the feast. Dryden.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the highest mountains, and indeed all other parts of the earth contingently and indifferently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear

Her annual income to the crooked thare;
But greedy murtals, rummaging her store,
Digged d from her entrails first the precious ore. Dryden.

TO DIG. v. a. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Job. iii. 21.

They have often dug into lands that are described in old authors, as the places where such particular statues or obelisks stood, and have seldom failed of success in their pursuit. Addison's Travels.

TO DIG UP. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth. Id.

If I digg'd up thy forefather's graves;

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not flake mine ire.

Shakspeare.

DIGERENT. adj. [digerent, Latin.] That which has the power of digelling, or caustic digestion.

DIGEST. n. f. [digesta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompense of the laws of mine own nation.

Bacon.
Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade.

Arbutnot.

DIGEST. v. a. [digero, digestum, Latin.]

1. To distribute into various clalies or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear?

Shakspeare.

Each then has organs to digest his food;
One to beget, and one receive the brood.

Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chemical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

A few chosen friends, who sometimes deign
To bless my humble roof, with fensle refin'd,
Learning digested well.

Thomson.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vault and firrings of those broils,
'Ginning' i' th' middle: starting thence away,
To what may be digested in a play.

bk lere.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; to not reject.

First, let us go to dinner.

—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.
—No, pray thee, let it serve for table talk;
Then howsoever thou speak'st, 'mong other things
I shall digest it.

Shakspeare.

The pleasure of numbers, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility.

Peabum.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwall and Albany,

With my two daughters dowers, digest the third.

Shakspeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound; to generate pus in order to a cure.

DIGEST. v. n. To generate matter as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGESTER. n. f. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters.

Arbutnot.

2. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state.

Quincy.

3. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digester.

Temple.

DIGESTIBLE. adj. [from digest.] That which is capable of being digested or concocted in the stomach.

Those medicines that purge by stool enter not into the melencholy veins; but are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.

Bacon.

DIGESTION. n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digelling or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both.

Shakspeare.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation, heat, air, and motion; but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion.

Arbutnot.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite: and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion.

Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion.

South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chemical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold.

Bacon.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houles of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there.

Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodizing; the maturation of a scheme.

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in council; consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men.

Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

DIGESTIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chillsfactory menstruum; or a digestive preparation; drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very same state; the one active, piercing and digestive by its heat; the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production.

Hale.

3. Considerating; methodizing.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought;
This future life is into method brought.

Dryden.

DIGESTIVE. n. f. [from digest.] An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives.

Wifmann.

DIGGER. n. f. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles.

Boyle.

TO DIGHT. v. a. [bihatan, to prepare, to regulate; Saxon.] To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which maketh him invisible to fight.

Spenser.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antic pillar, massy proofs,
And storied windows richly dight;
Calling a dim religious light.

Milton.

Just to the proud insulting lass,
Array'd and dighted Hudibras.

Hudibras.

DIGIT. n. f. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digit high, or somewhat more, the quicksilver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere.

Boyle.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten.

Not only the number seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by moli, but all or most of other digit have been as mystically applauded.

Brown's Vulgar Err.

DIGITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into divisions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multitudinous, or such as are digitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants.

Vulgar Errours.

DIGLADIATION. n. f. [digladiatio, Latin.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affectation of an intricate obscurity.

Glanville.

DIGNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity; it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are styled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from dignify.]

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person.

Walton's Angler.

TO DIGNIFY. v. a. [from dignus, and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre.

Such a day,

So sought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not 'till now to dignify the times,
Since Caesar's fortunes!

Shakspeare.

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But your worth will dignify our feast.

Ben. Johnson.

No turbot dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.

Pope.

DIGNITARY. n. f. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superiority, they may be persons of superior merit.

Swift.

DIGNITY. n. f. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and

and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hosier.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands.

4. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought, And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakspeare.

For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them.

4. [Among ecclesiastics.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

5. Maxims; general principles; καριαὶ δοξαί.
The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare and peremptory averrations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from dignifacio, Lat.] Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignities, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DIGRESS. v. n. [digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth, to digress no farther, that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brewster.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate.

I am come to keep my word,

Though in some part am forced to digress,

Which at more leisure I will so excuse

As you shall well be satisfied.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,

Digress from the valour of a man.

DIGRESSION. n. f. [digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought for much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney.

He, she knew, would intermix

Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute

With conjugal cares.

Here some digressions I must make, t' accuse

Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but near the equinoctial intersections, it is right and greater; near the solstices, more oblique and lesser. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. f. [Dike, Saxon; dyk, Erie.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring found

The rising rivers float the nether ground. Dryden.

The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud

With deeper sible blots the silver flood. Pope.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it. Cresley.

To DILACERATE. v. a. [dilacerare, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DILACERATION. n. f. [from dilaceratio, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbutnot on Diet.

To DILANIATE. v. a. [dilaniare, Latin.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind. Hosier.

To DILAPIDATE. v. a. [dilapidare, Latin.] To ruin; to throw down.

DILAPIDATION. n. f. [dilapidatio, Latin.] The incumbent suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same; and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed any willful waste in or upon the glebe-wood, or any other inheritance of the church. Ashe.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar. Ashe's Parergon.

DILATABILITY. n. f. [from dilatabilis.] The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatibility or extensibility of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Key.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion. Ashe.

DILATABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a greater number of branches called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, dilatated and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot.

DILATATION. n. f. [from dilatatio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending into greater space.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Hosier.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts, which maketh them more lively and stirring. East.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton.

To DILATE. v. a. [dilatari, Latin.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,

Than had ye forth with a prince's peer;

For now your light doth more itself set out,

And in my darkness greater doth appear. Symonds.

Satan alarm'd,

Collecting all his might, dilatated flood,

Like Tiberis, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.

Opener of mine eyes,

Dim erst; dilatated spirits, ampler heart,

And growing up to godhead: which for thee

Chiefly I sought; without thee, can despise. Milton.

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate

Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Dilatus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;

Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Pope.

I mark the various tury of the winds;

These neither feazous gale, nor order birds;

They now dilate, and now contract their force;

Various their speed, but endless is their course. Pope.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woul'd them

For to dilate at large; but urg'd fore,

With piercing words, and piteous implore,

Him hasty to arise. Fairy Queen.

I observing,

Took once a pliant hour, and found good means

To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,

That I would all my pilgrimage attend,

Whereby per parcels she had something heard,

But not distinctively. Shakspeare.

To DILATE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

His heart dilates and glories in his strength. Alfington.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

It may be behoeful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lullie, by any addition or eloquence of speech. Clarendon.

DILATOR. n. f. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in choleric people. Ashe.

DILATORINESS. n. f. [from dilatari.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DILATORY. adj. [dilatarius, French; dilatarius, Lat.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatatory, and so to little purpose. Hosier.

What would it ever heal but by degrees?

That

Thou know'st we work by wits, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dillatory time. Shakespeare.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dillatory sloth, and tricks of Rome. Shakespeare.

Dillatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves. Ottway.

A dillatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison.

DILATION. n. f. [dilatatio, Latin.] The act of loving kindness.

So free is Christ's dillation, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle.

DILEMMA. n. f. [dilemma, Latin.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions.
A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judges will award it.

A dilemma, that bishop Morton the chancellor used, to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crutch.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound. Cowley.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desperate case!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma; either way I'm sped;
If I lose, they write, if I friends, they read me dead. Pope.

DILIGENCE. n. f. [diligentia, Latin.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Pet.

DILIGENT. adj. [diligens, Latin.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings. Prov.

2. Constantly applied; prosecuted with activity and perseverance; assiduous.

And the judges shall make diligent inquiry. Deuter.

DILIGENTLY. adv. [diligent, Latin.] With assiduity; with heed and perseverance; not carelessly; not idle; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you shall never be able to discern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what consists the beauty of good pictures. Dryden.

DILL. n. f. [Wile, Saxon.]

It hath a slender, fibrous, annual root: the leaves are like those of fennel; the seeds are oval, plain, streaked, and buttered.

Dill is raised of seed, which is ripe in August. Martine.

DILUCID. adj. [dilucidus, Latin.]

1. Clear; plain; not opaque.

2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [dilucidare, Latin.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not traduce or extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DILUCIDATION. n. f. [dilucidatio, Latin.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUENT. adj. [diluens, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. f. [diluent, Latin.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it. Arbutnot.

To DILUTE. v. a. [diluo, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed. Lodge.

The aliment ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue. Arbutnot.

2. To make weak.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater.

Newton's Opticks.
The chamber was dark, left these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newt.

No XL.

DILUTER. n. f. [diluter, Latin.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment. Ambros.

DILUTION. n. f. [dilatatio, Latin.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation, or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly. Arbutnot.

DILUVIAN. adj. [diluvium, Latin.] Relating to the deluges.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally unto all countries about. Bianst.

DIM. adj. [dimme, Saxon; dy, Welsh; dov, Esic.]

1. Not having a quick fight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form, how can my spark discern,
Which, dim by nature, art did never clear? Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Regius.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being. Lodge.

Something, as dim to our internal view,
Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do. Pope.

4. Obscuring the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wondrous fair did seem to be,
That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw
Through the dim shade, that all men might it see. Fa. Qu.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,
It dims the dazzled eye, and daunts the senses quite. Fa. Qu.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet enunchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted. Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight? Lodge.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head,
With all such reading as was never read. Pope.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship through the ocean wide,
By conduct of some star doth make her way,
When as a storm hath dimm'd her truly guide,
Out of her course doth wander far astray.

Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining light;
But none can help our harms by wailing them. Shakespeare.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimm'd his face,
Thrice chang'd. Milton.

DIMENSION. n. f. [dimensio, Latin.] Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

He try'd
The tomb, and found the strain dimensions wide. Dryden.

My gentleman was measuring my walls, and taking the dimensions of the room. Swift.

DIMENSIONLESS. adj. [from dimension.] Without any definite bulk.

In they pass'd
Dimensions through heav'nly doors. Milton.

DIMENSIVE. adj. [dimensus, Latin.] That which marks the boundaries or outlines.

All bodies have their measure, and their space;
But who can draw the soul's dimension lines? Davies.

DIMICATION. n. f. [dimicatio, Latin.] A battle; the act of fighting; contest.

DIMIDIATION. n. f. [dimidiatio, Latin.] The act of halving;
division into two equal parts.

To DIMINISH. v. a. [diminuo, Latin.]

1. To make less by abridgment or destruction of any part; the opposite to increase.

That we call good which is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us. Lodge.

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought
Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw
The number of thy worshippers.

4. To take any thing from that to which it belongs; the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the impromission of the duke. Hayward.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it. Deut.

To DIMINISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had increases rather than diminish; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in to fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

6 Y

- Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye; Pope
 Before the Boreal blasts the vellels fly.
DIMINISHINGLY. adv. [from diminish.] In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.
 I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. Locke DIMINUTION. n. f. [diminutio, Latin.]
 1. The act of making less; opposed to augmentation.
 The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker
 2. The state of growing less; opposed to increase.
 The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton
 Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke
 3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.
 Gladly to thee
 Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;
 Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd
 In military honour next. Philips
 They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his. Addison
 4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.
 Make me wife by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles
 5. [In architecture.] The contradiotion of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.
DIMINUTIVE. adj. [diminutivus, Latin.] Small; little; narrow; contracted.

The poor wren,
 The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
 Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakespeare
 It is the interest of mankind, in order to the advance of knowledge, to be sensible they have yet attained it but in poor and diminutive measure. Glanville
 The light of man's understanding is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present. South
 If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison
 They know how weak and awkward many of those little diminutive discourses are. Watts

DIMINUTIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 1. A word formed to express littleness; as lappulus, in Latin, a little stone; maifonette, in French, a little house; manniken, in English, a little man.

He afterwards proving a dainty and effeminate youth, was commonly called, by the diminutive of his name, Peterkin or Perkin. Bacon

Sim, while but Sim, in good repute did live;
 Was then a knave, but in diminutive. Cotton

2. A small thing; a fenic not now in use.
 Follow his chariot; monster-like, be shewn
 For poor'th diminutive, for doits! Shakespeare

DIMINUTIVELY. adv. [from diminutive.] In a diminutive manner.

DIMINUTIVENESS. n. f. [from diminutive.] Smallness; little-ness; pettyness; want of bulk; want of dignity.

DIMINISH. adj. [from dim.] Somewhat dim; somewhat obscure.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
 My eyes are somewhat dimish grown;
 For nature, always in the night,
 To your decays adapts my sight. Swift

DIMISSORY. adj. [dimissorius, Latin.] That by which a man is dismissed to another jurisdiction.

A bishop of another diocese ought neither to ordain or admit a clerk, without the consent of his own proper bishop, and without the letters dimissory. Hayliffe

DIMITY. n. f. A fine kind of fustian, or cloath of cotton.

I directed a towze of fine dimity. Hefman

DIRMIV. adv. [from dim.]
 1. Not with a quick sight; not with a clear perception.
 Unspcakable! who fitt't above these heav'n's,
 To us invisible, or dimly seen Milton
 In these thy lowest works.

2. Not brightly; not luminously.
 In the beginning of our pumping the air, the match appeared well lighted, though it had almost fill'd the receiver with its plentiful fumes; but by degrees it burnt more and more dimly. Bisley

I saw th' angelick guards from earth ascend,
 Grieved they must now no longer man attend;
 The beams about their temples dimly shone;
 One would have thought the crime had been their own. Dry

DIRMNESS. n. f. [from dim.]

1. Dulness of sight.

2. Want of apprehension; stupidity.

Answerable to this dimness of their perception was the whole system and body of their religion. Deay of Play

DIMPLE. n. f. [dint, a hole; dintle, a little hole; by a careless pronunciation dimple. Skinner.] The small cavity or depression in the cheek or chin.

The dimple of the upper lip is the common measure of them
 all. Grew

In her forehead's fair half-round,
 Love sits in open triumph crown'd;
 He in the dimple of her chin,
 In private state, by friends is seen. Prior

To DIMPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sink in small cavties, or little inequalities.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
 And smiling eddies dimpled in the main. Dryden

External smiles his emptiness betray,
 As shallow streams run dimpling all away. Pope

DIMPLED. adj. [from dimple.] Set with dimples.

On each side her
 Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids. Shakespeare

DIMPLY. adj. [from dimple.] Full of dimples; sinking in little inequalities.

As the smooth surface of the dimply flood,
 The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod. Warren

DIN. n. f. [dyn, a noise; dynan, to make a noise, Sax. din, to thunder, Islandick.] A loud noise; a violent and continued sound.

And all the way he roared as he went,
 That all the forest with affrightment
 Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein
 Fled fast away from that so dreadful din. Spenser

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;
 To make an earthquake; sure, it was the rear
 Of a whole herd of lions. Shakespeare

While the cock with lively din
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
 And to the flock or the barn-door
 Stoutly struts, his dame before. Milton

Now night over heav'n
 Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,
 And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton

How, while the troubled elements around,
 Earth, water, air, the flaming din resound,
 Through streams of smok and adverse fire he rides,
 While ev'ry shot is level'd at his sides. Smith

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear together. Locke

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

Rather live
 To bait thee for his bread, and din your ears
 With hungry cries. Ormsby

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's half-pence? That hath been often dinned in my ears. South

To DINE. v. n. [diner, French.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,
 And from the mat he's somewhere gone to dinner:
 Good sister, let us dine, and never sit. Shakespeare

Myself, he, and my filler,
 To-day did dine together. Shakespeare

He would dine with him the next day.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,
 With whom old Homer makes such noise,
 The greatest actions I can find,
 Are, that they did their work and din'd. Prior

To DIN. v. a. To give a dinner to; to feed.

Boil this refecting root in gen'rous wines,
 And let beside the door the sickly flock to dine. Dryden

DINETICAL. adj. [dinetical.] Whirling round; vertiginous.

Some of late have concluded, from spots in the sun, which appear and disappear again, that, besides the revolution it maketh with its orbs, it hath also a dinetical motion, and rolls upon its own poles. Brown's Vulgar Errors

A spherical figure is most commodious for dinetical motion, or revolution upon its own axis. Reg

To DING. pret. ding. v. a. [dringen, Dutch.]

1. To dash with violence.

2. To impress with force.

To DING. v. n. To bluster; to bounce; to huff. A low word.

He huffs and dings at such a rate, because he will not speak the little we have left to get him the title and estate of lord
 Strut. Arbuckle

DING-DONG. n. f. A word by which the found of bells is imitated. Lat

Let us all ring fancy's knell;
Ding, ding bell. Shakspeare.
 D'SGLE. n. f. [from den, or bin, a hollow, Saxon.] A hollow between hills; a dale.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood;
 And every bosky bourn from side to side,
 My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood. Milton.
 D'SING-ROOM. n. f. [dine and room.] The principal apartment of the house; the room where entertainments are made. He went out from the dining-room before he had fallen into error by the intemperance of his meat, or the deluge of drink. Taylor.

D'NNER. n. f. [dinner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not stay a jot for dinner:
 Go, get it ready. Shakspeare.
 Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the publick prayers of the church, or some parts of them, be said publicly in the family. Taylor.
 The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
 The quarry share, their plenteous dinner halle. Dryden.
 D'NNER-TIME. n. f. [dinner and time.] The time of dining.

I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.
 Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
 Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.
 D'INT. n. f. [dine, Saxon.]

1. A blow; a stroke.

Much daunted with that dint, her sense was daz'd;
 Yet kindling rage, herself she gather'd round. Fairy Queen.
 Neither vainly hope
 To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
 Though temper'd heavenly; for that mortal dint,
 Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
 The dint of pity. Shakspeare.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er,
 And, staining hard the statue, was afraid
 His hands had made a dint and hurt the maid. Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.

We are to writh the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dewlap'd bull now chafes along the plain,
 While burning love ferments in every vein;
 His well arm'd front against his rival aims,
 And by the dint of war his milchicks claims. Garr.

D'INT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other doth assail,
 And strike so fiercely, that they do imprint
 Deep dinted furrows in the batter'd mail:
 The iron walls to ward their blows are weak and frail. F. 2.

Leave, leave, fair birds, your solitary bones,
 No more shall you return to it alone;
 It nurseth fadness; and your body's print,
 Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Dryden.

Deep dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
 Sunk me her eyes, and toothicks are her jaws. Dryden.

DISUMERATION. n. f. [disumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbing out singly.

D'IOCESAN. n. f. [from diocesi.] A bishop as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others, for the instruction of their congregation. Taylor.

D'IOCESS. n. f. [diocessi.] A Greek word compounded of dia and cece. The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; in this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into diocesi, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical. Guald.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocesi a convenient time. Whitgift.

He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islands of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy; that is nothing at all, since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our kings, those isles were annexed to the diocesi of Winchester. Raleigh.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocesi, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. Saunders.

D'IOPTICAL. n. f. [dioptra.] Affording a medium for the D'IOPTICK. n. f. light; admitting the light in the view of distant objects.

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrial glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Dryden.
 View the splendors of the moon through a dioptrick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows. Milnes.

D'IOPTICKS. n. f. A part of optics, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harriot.

D'IOPTEROSIS. n. f. [dioptra, and osis, to make strait.] A chirurgical operation, by which crooked or dislocated members are made even, and restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harriot.

T'O DIP. v. a. particip. dipped, or dip't. [Sippan, Saxon; dispon, Dutch.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor.

The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon. Asylife.

Old Caines compas'd thrice the crew,
 And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
 Which thrice he spinn'd round, and thrice aloud
 Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryden.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
 And from the bright meridian where he stood,
 Defending, dipp'd his hands in lovers blood. Dryden.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire;
 One dip the pencil, and one bring the lyre. Pope.

Now our fancy's easy wing convey'd,
 The king defended to th' Elysian shade;
 There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
 Old Bavius first to dip poetick souls. Pope.

So fishes rising from the main, can fear with moisten'd wings on high;
 The moisture dry'd, they sink again,
 And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet.

And though not mortal, yet cold should'ring dew
Dip me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milton.

3. To be engaged in any affair.

When men are once dipp'd, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on till they are fiddled. L'Estrange.

In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dip't in the rebellion of the common. Dryden.

4. To engage as a pledge; jointly used for the first mortgage.

Be careful fill of the main chance, my foot;
 Put out the principal in trusty hands,
 Live on the use, and never dip thy lands. Dryden.

T'O DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.

We have fishes in our cups, and in our dishes; and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot. L'Estrange.

2. To enter; to pierce.

The valiant dipping in Prometheus' side,
 His bloody beak with his torn liver dy'd. Graville.

3. To enter slightly into any thing.

When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volume. Pope.

4. To drop by chance into any matter; to chauce by chance.

With what all thoughts of Jove art thou possess'd?
 Wouldst thou prefer him to some man? Suppose
 I dipp'd among the world, and status chose? Dryden.

D'IPNETIC. n. f. [from dip and netic.] The name of a bird.

Dip bird is named of his diving and listlessness. Corne.

D'IPPER. n. f. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

D'IPPING. Nela. n. f. A device which shews a particular property of the magnetick needle, so that, besides its polarity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively. Phil.

D'IPHTONG. n. f. [diptych.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound; as vain, leaf, casar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word. Heldt.

Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone.

Notes on the Kiad.

D'IPLOE. n. f. The inner plate or lamina of the skull.

D'IPLOMA. n. f. [diploma.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege, so called because they used formerly to be written on wax'd tables, and folded together.

DIREAS. n. f. [Latin, from dirēus, to thirst.] A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

More by intemperance die

In meats, and drinks, which on the earth ſhall bring

Diſeaſes dire; of which a monſtrous crew
Before thee ſhall appear.

Milton.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimæras dire.
Or what the croſs, dire-looking plant ſinites,

Milton.

Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites.
Dire was the toſſing, deep the groans, deſpair

Milton.

Tended the ſick.
Diſcord! dire ſifter of the ſlaughter'd pow'r,

Small at her birth, but riſing ev'ry hour;
While ſcarce the ſkies her horrid head can bound,

Pepe.

She ſalks on earth, and ſhakes the world around.

DIRECT. adj. [directus, Latin.]

1. Strait, not crooked.

2. Not oblique.

The ſhips would move in one and the ſame ſurface; and conſequently muſt needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the interſection of croſs lines.

Bentley.

3. [In aſtronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progreſſively through the zodiac, not retrograde.

Two geomantic figures were diſplay'd,
Above his head, a warrior and a maid,

Dryden.

One when direct, and one when retrograde.

4. Not collateral, as the grandſon ſucceeds his grandſire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to ſome end.

Such was as then the ſtate of the kings, as it was no time by direct means to ſeek her. And ſuch was the ſtate of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of ſeeking her. Sid. He that does this, will be able to caſt off all that is ſuperfluous; he will ſee what is pertinent, what coherent, what is direct to, what ſides by the queſtion.

Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be, that are in nature faithful and ſincere, and plain and direct; not crafty and involved.

Bacon.

7. Plain; expreſs.

He no where, that I know, ſays it in direct words.

Locke.

DIRECT. v. a. [dirige, directum, Latin.]

2. An inſtrument that ſerves to guide any manual operation.

DIRECTION. n. f. [directio, Latin.]

1. Aim at a certain point.

The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that diſtinguiſhes charity.

Smallridge.

2. Motion impreſſed by a certain impulſe.

Theſe mens opinions are not the product of judgment or the conſequence of reaſon; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction.

Locke.

No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body can either move of itſelf, or of itſelf alter the direction of its motion.

Corney.

3. Order; command; preſcription.

From the council that St. Jeſome giveth Læta, of taking heed how ſhe read the apocrypha; as alſo by the help of other learned mens judgments, delivered in like caſe, we may take direction.

Hooker.

Ev'n now

I put myſelf to thy direction.

Shakespeare.

He needs not our miſtruſt, ſince he delivers

Our offices, and what we have to do,

To the direction juſt.

Shakespeare.

The nobles of the people digged it by the direction of the law-giver.

Numb. xxi. 18.

Mens paſſions and God's direction ſeldom agree. K. Charles.

All nature is but art unknown to thee.
All chance, direction which thou canſt not ſee.

Page.

General direction for ſchoolaſtic diſputers, is never to diſpute upon mere trifles.

Watts.

DIRECTIVE. n. f. [from dirē.]

1. Having the power of direction.

A law therefore generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodneſs of operation.

Hobbes.

A power of command there is without all queſtion, that there be ſome doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reſide, whether in the will or the underſtanding.

The true reſolution is, that the directive command for counſel in the underſtanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will.

Branch. ſecond Hitt.

On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies.

Gru.

2. Informing; ſhewing the way.

Not viſited by one directive ray,

From cottage ſtreaming, or from airy hall.

Tomſon.

DIRECTLY. adv. [from direct.]

1. In a ſtraight line; rectilinearly.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is oppoſed to them, the more it is enlightened; becauſe the light languiſhes and leſſens the farther it removes from its proper ſource.

Dryden.

There was no other place aſſigned to any of this matter, than that whereto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe which was juſt underneath.

Watts.

If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it ſhall be refracted by the incident ray.

Newton.

2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of conſequence.

Infidels being clean without the church, deny directly and utterly reject the very principles of Chriſtianity, which heretics embrace, and erroneouſly miſconſtruction.

Hobbes.

No man hath hitherto been ſo impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer.

Hobbes.

By aſſerting the ſcripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myſelf enemies in the populi directly, becauſe they have kept the ſcripture from us what they could, and have reſerved to themſelves a right of interpreting them.

Dryden.

His work directly tends to raiſe ſentiments of honour and virtue in his readers.

Dryden.

No reaſon can poſſibly be aſſigned, why it is beſt for the world that God Almighty hath ſuch a power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man ſhould have the like.

Swift.

DIRECTNESS. n. f. [from direct.] Straitneſs; tendency to any point; the neareſt way.

They argued from celestial cauſes only, the conſtant vicinity of the ſun, and the directneſs of his rays; never ſuſpecting that the body of the earth had fo great an efficiency in the changes of the air.

Bentley.

DIRECTOR. n. f. [director, Latin.]

1. One that has authority over others; a ſuperintendent; one that has the general management of a deſign or work.

Himſelf flood director over them, with nodding or ſtamping, ſhewing he did like or miſlike thoſe things he did not underſtand.

Swift.

In all affairs thou ſole director.
What made directors cheat in ſouth-ſea year?

Page.

2. A rule; an ordinance.

Common forms were not deſign'd
Directors to a noble mind.

Swift.

3. An inſtructor; one who ſhews the proper methods of proceeding.

They are glad to uſe ſuch as counſellors and directors in all their dealings which are of weight, as contracts, teſtaments.

Hobbes' Pref.

4. One who is conſulted in caſes of confidence.

I am her director and her guide in ſpiritual affairs.

Dryden.

5. An inſtrument in ſurgery, by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by ſliding in on a director, the groove of which prevents its being miſguided.

Sharp.

DIRECTORY. n. f. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers publiſhed in the rebellion for the direction of their feet in acts of worſhip.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot content to the taking away of the book of Common Prayer.

Watts.

Oxford Requies against the Covenant.

DIRTY. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical; all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and ful, as dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.] Diry, dreadful; dismal.

Point of spear it never piercen would,

Ne dint of dirful sword, divide the substance could. Spens.

But yet at last, wherewith the dirful fiend,

She saw not fir, off shaking vain affright,

She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end;

Th'n God the pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight. Spens.

Dirful hap betide that hated wretch

That makes us wretched by the death of thee. Shakespeare.

The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that dirful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter. Swib.

I curs'd the dirful author of my woes:

'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose. Dryden.

The wrath of Pelcus' son, the dirful spring

Of all the Grecian woe, O goddess, sing. Pope.

DIRNESS. n. f. [from diry.] Dismalness; horror; hideousness.

Dirness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,

Cannot once flart me. Shakespeare.

DIRPTION. n. f. [dirptio, Latin.] The act of plundering.

DIRGE. n. f. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn dirige gressus meos, as some pretend; but from the Teut. dyrt, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrt, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the deed. Vershegen. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th'imperial jointreys of this warlike state,

Have we, as 'twere, with a defaced joy,

With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,

Taken to wife. Shakespeare.

Mean while the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the diriges and obsequies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.

You from above shall hear each day,

One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay,

Thence your own anthem shall become,

Your lasting epicidium. Sandys.

All due measure, of her mourning kept,

Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept. Dryden.

DIRIGENT. adj. [dirigen, Latin.]

The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line described is carried in the generation of any figure. Harris.

DIRK. n. f. [an Erse word.] A kind of dagger used in the Highlands of Scotland.

In vain thy hungry mountaineers

Come forth in all their warlike geers,

The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,

In which they daily wont to swagger. Tickell.

TO DIRKE. v. a. [To spoil; to ruin. Obsolete.]

Thy waste bigness but cumbers the ground,

And dirkes the beauties of my blossoms round. Spenser.

DIRT. n. f. [dyrt, Dut. dir, Islandick.] Mud; filth; mire;

any thing that sticks to the clothes or body.

They gilding dir, in noble verse

Ruffick philosophy rehearse. Denham.

Numbers engage their lives and labours to heap together a little dir, that shall bury them in the end. Watts.

They all assured me that the sea rises as high as ever, though the great heaps of dir it brings along with it are apt to choke up the shallows. Addison.

Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows;

From dir and sea-weed as proud Venice rose:

In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,

And all that rais'd the hero sunk the man. Pope.

Is yellow dir the passion of thy life?

Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife. Pope.

2. Meanness; foridness.

TO DIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To foul; to blemish; to make filthy; to bedaub; to soil; to pollute; to naffy.

Ill company is like a dog, who dirts those most whom he loves best. Swift.

1. Naffiness; filthiness; foulness.

2. Meanness; baseness; sordidness.

DIRTY. adj. [from diry.]

1. Foul; naffily; filthy.

Thy Dol and Helen of thy noble thoughts

Is in base durance, and contagious prison,

Haul'd thither by mechanick, dirty hands. Shakespeare.

2. Sullied; not elegant.

Found an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one. Lact.

3. Mean; base; despicable.

Such employments are the diseases of labour, and the rust of time, which it contracts not by lying still, but by dirty employment. Taylor.

Marriages would be made upon more natural motives than meer dirty interest, and increase of riches without measure or end. Temple.

'I hey come at length to grow fots and epicures, mean in their discourses, and dirty in their practices. Swib.

TO DIRT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To foul; to soil.

The lords Struts lived generously, and never used to dirty their fingers with pen, ink, and counters. Arbutnot.

2. To disgrace; to scandalize.

DISRUPTION. n. f. [disruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of burbling, or breaking.

2. The state of burbling, or breaking.

DIS. An inseparable particle used in composition, implying commonly a privative or negative signification of the word to which it is joined; as, to disarm, to join, to disjoin.

It is borrowed from dis, used by the French and Spaniards in this sense; as desmours, to untie; desferrar, to banish; from the Latin dis; as dis, to build; des, to destroy.

DISABILITY. n. f. [from disable.]

1. Want of power to do any thing; weakness; impotence.

Our consideration of creatures, and attention unto scriptures, are not in themselves things of like disability to breed or beget faith. Hester.

Many withdrew themselves out of pure faintness, and dis- ability to attend the conclusion. Kalidge.

He that knows most of himself, knows least of his knowledge, and the exercised understanding is conscious of its dis- ability. Glanville.

The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disability of brutes. Lact.

2. Want of proper qualifications for any purpose; legal impediment.

A suit is commenced in a temporal court for an inheritance, and the defendant pleads in disability, that the plaintiff is a bastard. Ayliffe.

It is true, indeed, that this disadvantage which the dissenters at present lie under, of a disability to receive church preferments, will be easily remedied by the repeal of the test. Swift.

TO DISABLE. v. a. [dis and able.]

1. To deprive of natural force; to weaken; to crush.

The invasion of the Scots, and rebellion of the barons, did not only *disab*le this king to be a conqueror, but deprived him both of his kingdom and life. Davies.

Nor so is overcome

Satan, whose fall from heav'n, a deadlier bruise

*Disab*led not to give thee thy death's wound. Milten.

A Christian's life is a perpetual exercise, a wrestling and warfare, for which sensual pleasure disables him, by yielding to that enemy with whom he must strive. Taylor.

2. To impair; to diminish.

'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio,

How much I have *disab*led mine estate,

By shewing something a more swelling port

Than my taint means would grant continuance. Shakspe.

3. To make unactive.

I have known a great fleet *disab*led for two months, and thereby lose great occasions, by an indisposition of the admiral. Temp.

4. To deprive of usefulness or efficacy.

Farewel, Monsieur Traveller; look you list, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakspeare.

Your days I will alarm, I'll haunt your nights,

And worse than want disable your delights. Dryden.

5. To exclude as wanting proper qualifications.

I will not disable any for proving a scholar, nor yet dissemble that I have been many happily forced upon the course to which by nature they seem much indisposed. Wotton.

TO DISABUSE. v. a. [dis and abuse.] To set free from a mistake; to disentangle from a fallacy; to set right; to undeceive.

The impossibility and fallacy of our senses impose not only on common heads, but even more refined mercuries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse you. Glanville.

Those teeth fair Lyce must not show,

If she would bite her lovers: though

Like birds they stoop at seeming grapes,

Are *disab*us'd, when first the grapes. Waller.

If by simplicity you meant a general defect in those that profess angling, I hope to disabuse you. Warton.

Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;

Still by himself abus'd, or disabus'd. Pope.

DISACCOMMODATION, n. f. [dis and accommodation.] The state of being unfit or unprepared.

Desolations have happened in some places more than in others, according to the accommodation or disaccommodation of them to such calamities. Hale.

DISADVANTAGE, n. f. [dis and advantage.]

1. Loss; injury to interest; as, he sold to disadvantage.

2. Diminution of any thing desirable, as credit, fame, honour. Our old English poet, Chaucer, in many things resembled Ovid, and that with no disadvantage on the side of the modern author. Dryden.

The most shining merit goes down to posterity with disadvantage, when it is not placed by writers in its proper light. Addison.

Those parts already published give reason to think, that the Iliad will appear with no disadvantage to that immortal poem. Addison.

His testimony will not be of much weight to its disadvantage, since they are liable to the same objection of condemning what they did not understand. Swift.

3. A state not prepared for defence.

But all in vain; no fort can be so strong, No fleshly breast can armed be found,

But will at last be won with bait'ry long.

Or unawares at disadvantage found. Spenser.

DISADVANTAGE, v. a. [from the noun.] To injure in interest of any kind.

All other violences are so far from advancing christianity, that they extremely weaken and disadvantage it. Deay of Pity.

DISADVANTAGEABLE, adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to profit; producing loss. A word not used.

In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long; for hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interch. Becon.

DISADVANTAGEOUS, adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to interest; contrary to convenience; unfavourable.

A multitude of eyes will narrowly inspect every part of him, consider him nicely in all views, and not be a little pleased when they have taken him in the worst and most disadvantageous lights. Addison.

DISADVANTAGEOUSLY, adv. [from disadvantageous.] In a manner contrary to interest or profit; in a manner not favourable to any useful end.

An approving nod or smile serves to drive you on, and make you display yourselves more disadvantageously.

Government of the Tongue.

And of my doleful disadventurous death. Spenser.

DISAFFECT, v. a. [dis and affect.] To fill with discontent; to discontent; to make left faithful or zealous.

They had attempted to disaffect and discontent his majesty's late army. Clarendon.

DISAFFECTED, part. adj. [from disaffect.] Not disposed to zeal or affection. Usually applied to those who are enemies to the government.

By denying civil worship to the emperor's statues, which the custom then was to give, they were proceeded against as disaffected to the emperor. Stillingfleet.

DISAFFECTEDLY, adv. [from disaffected.] After a disaffected manner.

DISAFFECTEDNESS, n. f. [from disaffected.] The quality of being disaffected.

DISAFFECTION, n. f. [from disaffected.] Want of zeal for the government; want of ardour for the reigning prince.

In this age, every thing disliked by those who think with the majority, is called disaffection. Swift.

DISAFFIRMANCE, n. f. [dis and affirm.] Confutation; negation.

That kind of reasoning which reduces the opposite conclusion to something that is apparently absurd, is a demonstration in disaffirmance of any thing that is affirmed. Hale.

DISAFFREST, v. a. [dis and forest.] To throw open to common purpose; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

The commissioners of the treasury moved the king to disafforest some forests of his, explaining themselves of such forests as lay out of the way, not near any of the king's houses. Becon.

How happy's he, which hath due place assign'd To his beasts; and disaffrested his mind! Deum.

DISAGREE, v. n. [dis and agree.]

1. To differ; not to be the same. The mind clearly and infallibly perceives all distinct ideas to disagree; that is, the one not to be the other. Lake.

2. To differ; not to be of the same opinion. Why both the bands in worship disagree, And some adore the flow'rs, and some the tree. Dryden.

3. To be in a state of opposition: followed by from or with, before the opposite.

It containeth many improprieties, disagreeing almost in all things from the true and proper description. Brown.

Strange it is, that they reject the plainest sense of scripture, because it seems to disagree with what they call reason. Atterbury.

DISAGREEABLE, adj. [from disagree.]

1. Contrary; unsuitable. Some demon, an enemy to the Greeks, had forced her to a conduct disagreeable to her sincerity. Pope.

2. Unpleasing; offensive. To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, either agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Lisle.

DISAGREEABLENESS, n. f. [from disagreeable.]

1. Unsuitableness; contrariety. 2. Unpleasantness; offensiveness.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son for all the dirt and foulness of his cloaths; the dearne of the person easily apologizing for the disagreeableness of the habit. South's Sermon.

DISAGREEMENT, n. f. [from disagree.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; diversity; not identity. These carry such plain and evident notes and characters, either of disagreement or affinity with one another, that the several kinds of them are easily known and distinguished. Woodward.

2. Difference of opinion; contrariety of sentiments. They seemed one to cross another, as touching their several opinions about the necessity of sacraments, whereas in truth their disagreement is not great. Hobbes.

DISALLOW, v. a. [dis and allow.]

1. To deny authority to any. When, said she, Were those first councils disallow'd by me?

Or where did I at sure tradition strike, Provided still it were apostolical. Dryden.

2. To consider as unlawful; not to permit an act. Their usual kind of disputing sheweth, that they do not disallow only these Romish ceremonies which are unprofitable, but count all unprofitable which are Romish. Hobbes.

3. To censure by some posterior act. It was known that the most eminent of those who professed his own principles, publicly disallowed his proceedings. Swift.

4. Not to justify. There is a secret, inward foreboding fear, that some evil or other will follow the doing of that which a man's own conscience disallows him in. South.

DISALLOW, v. n. To refuse permission; not to grant; not to make lawful.

God doth in converts, being married, allow continuance with infidels, and yet disallow that the faithful, when they are free, should enter into bonds of wedlock with such. Hobbes.

DISALLOWABLE, adj. [from disallow.] Not allowable; not to be suffered.

DISALLOWANCE, n. f. [from disallow.] Prohibition.

God accepts of a thing suitable for him to receive, and for us to give, where he does not declare his refusal and disallowance of it. South.

DISANIMATE, v. a. [dis and animate.]

1. To deprive of life. 2. To discourage; to deject; to depress.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies. Shakespeare.

He was confounded and *disanimat*ed at his presence, and added, how can the servant of my lord talk with my lord! Boyle's Seraphick Love.

DISANIMATION, n. f. [from disanimate.] Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation. Brown.

DISANNUL, v. a. [dis and annul.] This word is formed contrary to analogy by those who, not knowing the meaning of the word annul, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle. It ought therefore to be rejected as ungrammatical and barbarous. To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

The Jews ordinances for us to refuse, were to check our Lord himself, who hath disannul'd them. Hooker.
That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of men's fortunes and estates, and the like points of absolute power, being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon.

To be in both worlds full,
Is more than God was, who was hungry here:
Wouldst thou his laws of fasting disannul? Herbert.
Wilt thou my judgments disannul? Defame
My equal rule, to cast thyself of blame? Sandys.
DISANNULMENT. n. f. [from disannul.] The act of making void.

DISAPPEAR. v. n. [disparere, Fr.] To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton.
When the night and winter disappear,
The purple morning, rising with the year,
Salutes the spring. Dryden.
The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colour, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Lucia.
Criticks I saw, that other names deace,
And fix their own with labour in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left their third behind. Pope.

DISAPPOINT. v. a. [dis and appoint.]

1. To defeat of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.
The superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson.

Whilst the champion, with redoubled might,
Strikes home the javelin, his retiring foe
Shrinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow. Addison.
There's nothing like surprising the rogues: how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou hast prevented their revenge. Arbutnot.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praises. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.
The Janizaries, disappointed by the basiss of the spoil of the merchants, especially Christians and Jews, received of the bounty of Solymán a great largess. Koeller.

DISAPPOINTMENT. n. f. [from disappoint.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings: how many accidents have pass'd for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen? How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin? Spektator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. Addison.

DISAPPROBATION. n. f. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

Pope was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others written in his youth. Pope to Swift.

TO DISAPPROVE. v. a. [disapprover, French.] To dislike; to censure; to find fault with.

I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;
Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disprov'd. Prior.
Without good breeding, truth is disprov'd;
That only makes superior sense below'd. Pope.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted hither from Holland, and was disprov'd of by our court. Swift.

DISARD. n. f. [dis, ard, Saxon, a fool, Stinner; dis, ard, French, Janus.] A prattler; a boasting talker. This word is infected both by Stinner and Janus; but I do not remember it. Swift.

DISARM. v. a. [disarmer, French.]

1. To spoil or divest of arms; to deprive of arms.
I am still the same,
By different ways still moving to one same;
And by disarming you, I now do more
To save the town, than arming you before. Dryden.

2. It has of before the arms taken away.
They would be immediately disarm'd of their great magazine of artillery. Lake.

DISARRAY. v. a. [dis and array.] To undress any one; to divest of clothes.

So, as the bad, the witch thy disarray'd. Spenser.
Now night is come, now soon bet disarray,
And in her bed her lay. Spenser.

DISARRAY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disorder; confusion; loss of the regular order of battle.
He returned towards the river, to prevent such danger as the disarray, occasioned by the narrowness of the bridge, might cast upon them. Hayward.

Disarray and shameful rout ensue,
And force is add'd to the fainting crew. Dryden.

1. Undress.

DISASTER. n. f. [disastre, French.]

1. The blast or stroke of an unfavourable planet.
Stars shone with trains of fire, dew of blood fall;
Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse. Shakespeare.

2. Misfortune; grief; mishap; misery; calamity.
This day black omens threat the brightest fair,
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care;
Some dire disaster, or by force or flight,
But what, or where, the fates have wrapt in night. Pope.

TO DISASTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blast by the stroke of an unfavourable star.
Ah, chaste bed of mine, said she, which never heretofore couldst accuse me of one defiled thought, how canst thou now receive that disaster'd changing? Sidney.

2. To afflict; to mischief.
These are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks. Shakespeare.
In his own fields, the swain Disaster'd stands. Thomson.

Thereupon they flatly disavow,
To yield him more obedience or support. Denial.

TO DISAVOW. v. a. [dis and vow.] To disown; to deny knowledge of; to deny concurrence in any thing.

The heirs and posterity of them which yielded the same, are, as they say, either ignorant thereof, or do wilfully deny,
or steadfastly disavow it. Spenser.

The English, that knew his noble spirit, did believe his name was therein abused, which he manifested to be true by disavowing it openly afterwards. Hayward.

To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, and generally when a man will referre to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. Bacon.

A man that acts below his rank, doth but disavow fortune, and seemeth to be conscious of his own want in worth, and doth but teach others to envy him. Bacon.

He only does his conquest disavow,
And thinks too little what they found too much: Dryden.

We are reminded by the ceremony of taking an oath, that it is a part of that obedience which we learn from the gospel, expressly to disavow all evasions and mental reservations whatsoever. Addison.

When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.

Shakspeare.

To DISBRANCH. v. a. [dis and branch.] To separate or break off, as a branch from a tree.

I fear your disposition:

That nature which contains its origine,

Cannot be border'd certain in itself:

She that herself will fliver and disbranch

From her maternal sap, perforce must wither,

And come to deadly use.

Shakspeare.

But for such as are newly planted, they need not be disbranch'd till the sap begins to stir, that the so the wound may be healed without the fear, which our frosts do frequently leave.

Evelyn.

To DISCONTINUE. v. a. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lies I'll tell,

That men shall swear I've discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. Shakespeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of apostrophes to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Helder.

DISCONTINUITY. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Disunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That this discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal density with their parts. Newton's Opticks.

DISCONVENIENCE. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature, but in these disconveniences of nature deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall.

DISCORD. n. f. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppug-nancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows; each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakespeare.
He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth dis-cord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference, or contrariety of qualities.

Discord, like that of music's various parts;
Discord that makes the harmony of hearts;
Discord that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryden.
All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is found alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the link that sings to out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps. Shakespeare.
How doth music amaze us, when of discords she maketh
The sweetest harmony? Peacocks.

To DISCORD. v. n. [discordari, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do discord and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

DISCORDANCE. n. f. [from discord.] Disagreement; opposition; in consistency.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordanti, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But clogg'd with guilt, the joy was un sincere;
So various, to discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly distract and disorder the motions and revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cheyne's Phil. Princip.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred, if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; inasmuch, that if they be dis- cordant tuned, though each of them struck apart, would yield a pleasing sound; yet being struck together, they make a harsh and troublesome noise. B. J.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictory manner.

To DISCOVER. v. a. [discoveris, French; dis and cover.]

1. To shew; to disclose; to bring to light.

Take him for your husband and your lord,
'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryden.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.
So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; but my life
She never knew harm-doing. Shakespeare.

TO DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]
1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

Make known,

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakespeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune. Shakespeare.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judged wife of all; but that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all. Eccl.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.
If I, celestial fire! I ought
Have serv'd thy will, or gratify'd thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands. Dryden.

DISPROPORTION. n. f. [dis and proportion.] Unsuitableness in quantity of one thing, or one part of the same thing, to another; want of symmetry.

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own cline, complexion, and degree,
Whereto we fee in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural. Shakespeare Othello.

Reasoning, I oft admire
How nature, wife and frugal, could commit
Such disproportion; with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater, so many fold to this one use. Milton.

Perhaps from greatness, state, and pride,
Thus surprised, the may fall:
Sleep does disproportion hide,
And, death resembling, equals all. Waller.

For their strength,
The disproportion time is great, we cannot but Expect a fatal consequence. Denham's Scept.

What, did the liquid to th' assembly call,
To give their aid to form the pond'rous ball?
First, tell us, why did any come? next why
In such disproportion to the dry? Blackmore's Creation.

That we are designed for a more exalted happiness, than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vast disproportion to the desires and capacities of our soul.

TO DISPROPORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To mismatch; to join things unsuitable in quantity. Rogers's Sermons.

There its deformity to mock my body,

To shape my legs of an unequal size,

To disproportion me in every part. Shakespeare.

Distance and mens fears have so enlarged the truth, and so disproportioned every thing, that we have made the little troop of discontents a gallant army, and already measure by the evening shadow. Suckling.

Mulock craveth your acquaintance: many are of such disproportioned spirits, that they avoid her company. Praetian.

We on earth, with undiscordling voice,

May rightly answer that melodious noise;

As once we did, 'till disproportioned fun

Jarr'd against nature's chime. Milton.

DISPROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsuitable in quantity; not duly regulated in regard to something else.

Doubts and fears are the sharpest pallions: through these false optics all that you see is like the evening shadows, disproportionable to the truth, and strangely longer than the true daylight. Suckling.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the disproportionable differences of season. Brown.

We are apt to set too great a value on temporal blessings, and have too low and disproportionable esteem of spiritual. Smol.

There is no wine of so strong a body as to bear such a disproportionable quantity of water as sixty parts. Pope.

semble, and probably disssembler, in old French.]

1. To hide under false appearance; to conceal; to pretend that is not to be which really is.

Your son Lucentio

Doth love my daughter, and the loveth him,

Or both disssemble deeply their affections. Shakespeare.

She answered, that her soul was God's; and touching her faith, as he could not change, so she would not disssemble it. Hayward.

2. To pretend that to be which is not. This is not the true fignification.

In vain, on the disssembl'd mother's tongue,

Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung;

And real care in vain, and native love

In the true parent's panting breast had rove. Prior.

To DISSSEMBLE. v. a. To play the hypocrite.

Ye disssembled in your hearts when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, pray for us. Jeremiah, xlii. 20.

 Murther thy breath in middle of a word,
 And then again begin, and stop again,
 As if thou wert distraught and mad with terror? Shakespeare.

It would bustle forth; but I recover breath,
 And sense distrahit, to know well what I utter. Milton.

He possesses a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distrahit with immoderate cares. Rog.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, how would a perpetual noise distrahit us? We should, in the quietest retirement, be left able to sleep or meditate than in the middle of a sea-fight. Lake.

5. To make mad.

Wherefore throng thou hither?
 —To fetch my poor distrahit husband hence:
 Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
 And bear him home for his recovery. Shakespeare.

Better I were distrahit,
 So should my thoughts be fever'd by my griefs,
 And woes, by wrong imagination, lose
 The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare.

She was unable, in strength of mind, to bear the grief of his distrahit, and fell distrahit of her wits. Bacon.

You shall find a distrahit man fancy himself a king, and with a right inference require suitable attendance, respect, and obedience. Lake.

DISTRACTEDLY, adv. [from distrahit.] Madly; frantically.

Methodought her eyes had crost her tongue;
 For she did speak in flirts distrahitly. Shakespeare.

Of that peculiar matter out of which the bodies of vegetables, and consequently of animals, are formed, water is the common vehicle and distributor to the parts of those bodies. It'sward's Natural History.

DISTRIBUTION, n. f. [distributio, Latin.]

1. The act of distributing or dealing out to others.

Of great riches there is no real use, except it be in the distribution. Bacon.

Providence has made an equal distribution of natural gifts, whereof each creature severally has a share. L'Estrange.

Every man in a great station would imitate the queen in the distribution of officers in his disposal. Swift.

2. Act

2. ART of giving in charity.

Let us govern our charitable distributions by this pattern of nature, and maintain a mutual circulation of benefits and returns.

Atterbury.

3. [In logic.] As an integral whole is distinguished into its several parts by division; so the word distribution is most properly used, when we distinguish an universal whole into its several kinds of species.

Watts.

DISTRIBUTEV. adj. [from distribute.]

1. That which is employed in assigning to others their portions;

2. distributive justice, that which allots to each his sentence or claim.

If justice will take all, and nothing give,

Justice methinks is not distributive.

Dryden.

Observe the distributive justice of the authors, which is constantly applied to the punishment of virtue, and the reward of vice, directly opposite to the rules of their best critics. Sw.

2. That which assigns the various species of a general term.

DISTRIBUTIVELY. adv. [from distributive.]

1. By distribution.

2. Singly; particularly.

Although we cannot be free from all sin collectively, in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in us; yet, distributively at the least, all great and grievous actual offences, as they offer themselves one by one, both may, and ought to be, by all means avoided.

Hooker.

3. In a manner that expresses singly all the particulars included in a general term; not collectively.

An universal term is sometimes taken collectively for all its particular ideas united together, and sometimes distributively, meaning each of them single and alone.

Watts.

account of its sovereign qualities in medicines. It is generally brought over dry from the Levant. Miller.
Virgil reports of dittany, that the wild goats eat it when they are flout with darts. Mure.
DITTIED. adj. [from ditty.] Sung; adapted to music.
He, with his soft pipe, and smooth dittied song,
Well knows to still the wild winds when they roar. Milton.
DITTY. n. f. [dicht, Dutch.] A poem to be sung; a song.
Although we lay altogether aside the consideration of ditty or matter, the very harmony of sounds being framed in due sort, and carried from the ear to the spiritual faculties of our souls, is, by a native pulchre and efficacy, greatly available to bring to a perfect temper whatsoever is there troubled. Hob.
Being young, I fram'd to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament. Shakspeare.
Strike the melodious harp, shrill timbrels ring,
And to the warbling lute soft ditties sing. Sandys.
His annual wound in Lebanon, allur'd
The Syrian damiels to lament his fate,
In amorous ditties, all a summer's day. Milton.

curse is plainly specified. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To DIVE. v. n. [bippan, Saxon.]
1. To sink voluntarily under water.
I am not yet informed, whether when a diver *dive*s, having his eyes open, and swimmeth upon his back, he sees things in the air greater or less. Bacon.
Around our pole the spiry dragon glides,
And, like a winding stream, the bears divides,
The less and greater; who, by fate's decree,
Abhor to dive beneath the southern sea. Dryden.
That the air in the blood-vessels of live bodies has a communication with the outward air, I think, seems plain, from the experiments of human creatures being able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Air.
2. To go under water in search of any thing.
Crocodiles defend those pearls which lie in the lakes: the poor Indians are eaten up by them, when they dive for the pearl. Ralph.
The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where folly fights for kings, or *dive*s for gain. Pope.
3. To go deep into any question, doctrine, or science.
The wits that dive d' most deep, and soar'd most high,
Seeking man's powers, have found his weakness such. Dante.
He performs all this out of his own fund, without *dive*ing into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.
Whoever we would proceed beyond those simple ideas, and dive farther into the nature of things, we fall presently into darkness and obscurity. Locke.
You swim a-top, and on the surface strive;
But to the depths of nature never dive. Blackmore.
You should have dive d' into my inmost thoughts. Partridge.

1. One that sinks voluntarily under water.
If perseverance gain the diver's prize,
Not everlasting Blackmore this denies. Pope.
2. One that goes under water in search of treasure.
It is evident, from the relation of divers and fishes for pearls, that there are many kinds of shell-fish which lie respectually concealed in the deep, screened from our sight. Wald.
3. He that enters deep into knowledge or study.
He would have him, as I conceive it, to be no superficial and floating artificer; but a diver into causes, and into the mysteries of proportion. Whiston.
To DIVERGE. v. n. [divergere, Latin.] To tend various ways from one point.
Homogeneous rays, which flow from several points of any object, and fall perpendicularly on any reflecting surface, shall afterwards diverge from so many points. Newton.
DIVERGENT. adj. [from divergere, Lat.] Tending to various parts from one point.
DIVERS. adj. [diversus, Latin.] Several; sundry; more than one. It is now grown out of use.
We have divers examples in the primitive church of such as, by fear, being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, after repentance, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel. Hilary.
The teeth breed when the child is a year and a half old:
then they cast them, and new ones come about seven years;
but divers have backward teeth come at twenty, some at thirty and forty. Bacon.
Divers letters were shot into the city with arrows, wherein Solymans councils were revealed. Kneller.
Divers friends thought it strange, that a white dry body should acquire a rich colour, upon the allusion of springwater. Boyle.
DIVERSE. adj. [diversus, Latin.]
1. Different from another.
Four great basils came up from the sea, diverse one from another. Daniel.
2. Different from itself; various; multiform; diffused.
Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did the reverend favour any man so much as to be wholly his. Bon. Jovin.
3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.
To teize his papers, Curl, was next thy care; Pope.
His papers light, thy diverse toft in air.
DIVERSIFICATION. n. f. [from diversify.]
1. The act of changing forms or qualities.
If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will not wonder that such fruitful principles, or materials manners of diversification, should generate differing colours.

Boyle on Colours.

2. Variation; variegation.
3. Variety of forms; multiformity.
4. Change; alteration.

This which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified.

Hale.

70 DIVERSIFY. v. a. [diversifier, French.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another.

Locke.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations.

Addison.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters.

Addison.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods and plains, one place more clear, another more darksome, it is a pleasant picture.

Sidney.

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter, which may be much diversified.

Bacon.

DIVERSION. n. f. [from divert.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course.

Cutting off the top, and pulling off the buds, work retention of the sap for a time, and diversion of it to the sprouts that were not forward.

Bacon.

2. The cause by which any thing is turned from its proper course or tendency.

Fortunes, honours, friends,

Are mere diversions from love's proper object,

Which only is itself.

Denham.

3. Sport; something that unbends the mind by turning it off from care. Diversum seems to be something lighter than amusement, and less forcible than pleasure.

You for those ends whole days in council sit,

And the diversions of your youth forget.

Waller.

In the book of games and diversions the reader's mind may be supposed to be relaxed.

Addison.

Such productions of wit and humour as expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversion to readers.

Addison.

4. [In war.] The act or purpose of drawing the enemy off from some design, by threatening or attacking a distant part.

DIVERSITY. n. f. [diversitas, Fr. from diversitas, Lat.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness.

Then is there in this diversity no contrariety.

Hosier.

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and not resting in a bare diversity, quickly rise into a contrariety.

South's Sermons.

2. Variety.

The diversity of ceremonies in this kind ought not to cause dissension in churches.

Hosier.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tenion.

Arbutnot.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of stations; and if God should grant every one a middle station, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness propounded in it.

Rogers.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,

Blushing in bright diversities of day.

Pope.

DIVERSLY. adv. [from divers.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously.

Our common necessities, and the lack we all have as well of ghostly, as of earthly favours, in each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive: what all stand in need of seldom lieth hid.

Hosier.

Both of them do diversly work, as they have their medium diversly disposed.

Bacon.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business, displeasing to his people, was diversly interpreted.

none can be certain he has divined rightly. Dryden.

He took it with a bow, and soon divin'd

The seeming toy was not for nought design'd. Dryden.

In change of torment would be ease,

Could you divine what lovers bear;

Even you, Prometheus, would confess

There is no virtue like despair. Granville.

DIVINELY. adv. [from divine.]

1. By the agency or influence of God.

Faith, as we use the word, called commonly divine faith, has to do with no propositions but those which are supposed to be divinely inspired. Lale.

This topic was very fitly and divinely made use of by our apostle, in his conference with philosophers, and the inquisitive people of Athens. Bentley.

2. Excellently in the supreme degree.

The Grecians most divinely have given to the active perfection of men, a name expressing both beauty and goodness. Hosier.

She fair, divinely fair! fit love for gods.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!

Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;

'Too noble for revenge. Crouch.

3. In a manner noting a deity.

His golden horns appear'd,

That on the forehead shone divinely bright,

And o'er the banks diffus'd a yellow light. Aldrich.

An earthly paragon: behold divineness

No elder than a boy. Shakespeare.

DIVINER. n. f. [from divinare.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by supernatural means.

This rude drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Dronio, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me. Shakespeare.

Expell'd his oracles, and common temples of delusion, the devil runs into corners, exercising meaner trumperies, and acting his deeds in witches, magicians, diviners, and such inferior seducers. Brewster's Vulgar Errors.

2. Conjecturer; guesser.

If he himself be conscious of nothing he then thought on,

he must be a notable diviner of thoughts that can assure him that he was thinking. Lale.

DIVINERESS. n. f. [from diviner.] A prophetess; a woman professing divination.

The mad divineress had plainly writ,

A time should come, but many ages yet,

In which finister destinies ordain,

A dame should drown with all her feather'd train. Dryden.

DIVINITY. n. f. [from divinitas, French; from divinus, Latin.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God; deity; godhead.

As with new wine intoxicated both,

They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel

Divinity within them breeding wings,

Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation. Stillingfleet.

2. God; the Deity; the Supreme Being; the cause of causes.

3. False god.

Vain idols, deities that ne'er before

In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes,

Beastly divinities, and groves of gods. Perr.

4. Celestial being.

God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these divinities.

5. The science of divine things; theology.

Hear him but reason in divinity, And.

And, all admiring with an inward wish,
You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakspeare.

Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error. Shakspeare.
Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science. Swift.

6. Something supernatural.
They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakspeare.
DIVISIBLE. adj. [divisibilis, Lat.] Capable of being divided into parts; discernible; separable.

When we frame in our minds any notion of matter, we conceive nothing else but extension and bulk, which is impenetrable, or divisible and passive. Bentley.

DIVISIBILITY. n. f. [divisibilitas, French.] The quality of admitting division or separation of parts.

The most palpable absurdities will press the assertions of infinite divisibility. Glauco.

This will easily appear to any one, who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Luthe.

DIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from divisibilis.] Divisibility.
Naturalists disagree about the origin of motion, and the indefinite divisibility of matter. Boyle.

DIVISION. n. f. [divisio, Latin.]

Thou madest the spirit of the firmament, and commanded it to part asunder, and to make a division between the waters. 2 Esdr. vi. 41.

2. The state of being divided.
3. That by which any thing is kept apart; partition.

4. The part which is separated from the rest by dividing.
If we look into communities and divisions of men, we observe that the discreet man, not the witty, guides the conversation. Addison.

5. Division; discord; difference.
There was a division among the people, because of him. Jo. vii. 43.

As to our divisions with the Romaniists, were our differences the product of heat, they would, like small clefts in the ground, want but a cool season to cement them. Dec. of Piety.

6. Parts into which a discourse is distributed.
In the divisions I have made, I have endeavoured, the best
I could, to govern myself by the diversity of matter. Luthe.

Express the heads of your divisions in as few and clear words as you can, otherwise I never can be able to retain them. Swift.

7. Space between the notes of music, or parts of a musical composure; just time.
Thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen, in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division to her lute. Shakspeare.

Our tongue will run divisions in a tune, not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere. Glauco.

8. Distinction.
I will put a division between my people and thy people. Ex.

9. [In arithmetic.] The separation or parting of any number or quantity given, into any parts assigned. Cocker.

I have no relish of them; but about
In the divisions of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Shakspeare.

DIVISOR. n. f. [divisor, Latin.] The number given, by which the dividend is divided; the number which sheweth how many parts the dividend is to be divided into.

DIVORCE. n. f. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Latin.] The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe.

To relore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre. Shakspeare.

He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia. Dryden.

2. Separation; disunion.
Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections in her, from my religion. K. Char. es.

The slings, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms. Ayliffe.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.
4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,

And lift my soul to heav'n. Shakspeare.

To DIVORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.
Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is refrained, and not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them? Ho. ter.

The continent and the island were continued together, within mens remembrance, by a draw-bridge; but is now divorced by the downfallen cliffs. Carew.

So seem'd her youthful soul not easily forc'd,
Or from so fast, so sweet a seat divorc'd. Waller.

3. To separate from another.
If thou wert not glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulch'ring an adulteress. Shakspeare.

If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full perfection, nevertheless the mind, that should possess them divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiseration. Hosier.

4. To take away.
I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master woe me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities. Shakspeare.

DIVORCEMENT. n. f. [from divorce.] Divorce; separation of marriage.

Write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house. Dunstermy.

produces divorce or separation.

Death is the violent estranger of acquaintance, the eternal divorcer of marriage. Drummond.

DIVUR'ICK. adj. [divur'ick, Latin.] Having the power to provoke urine.

Divur'ick are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, that relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as force and stimulate. Those emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perfuming, and on empty stomachs. Arsabonist.

DIURNAL. adj. [diurnus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the day.
We observe in a day, which is a short year, the greatest heat about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, which is the diurnal solstice, and the same is evident from the thermometer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Think, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter here foment. Milton.

2. Constituting the day.
Why does he order the diurnal hours
To leave earth's other part, and rise in our's? Prior.

3. Performed in a day; daily; quotidian.
The prime orb,
Incredible how swift, had thither row'd Diurnal. Milton.

The diurnal and annual revolution of the sun have been,
from the beginning of nature, constant, regular, and universally observable by all mankind. Luthe.

DIURNAL. n. f. [diurnal, French.] A journal; a day-book.

DIURNALLY. adv. [from diurnal.] Daily; every day.

them to the publick. Tatler.

DIURNITY. n. f. [diurnitas, Lat.] Length of duration.

Such a coming, as it might be said, that that generation should not pass 'till it was fulfilled, they need not suppose of such diurnity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DIVULGE. v. a. [divulge, Latin.]

1. To publish; to make publick; to reveal to the world.
Men are better contented to have their commendations suppressed than the contrary much divulged. Hosier.

I will pluck the veil of modesty from the seeming mistress
Page, and divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Adonis.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulge'd, the land believ'd. Dryden.

You are deprived of the right over your own sentiments, of the privilege of every human creature, to divulge or conceal them. Pope.

The cabinets of the sick, and the closets of the dead, have been ransacked to publish our private letters, and divulge to all mankind the most secret sentiments of friendship. Pope.

2. To proclaim.
This is true glory and renown, when God
Looking on th' earth, with approbation, marks
The just man, and divulges him through heav'n
To all his angels, who with true applause Recount his praises. Milton.

DIVULGER. n. f. [from divulge.] A publisher; one that exposes to publick view.

I think not any thing in my letters could tend so much to my reproach, as the odious divulging of them did to the infamy of the divulgers.
King Charles.
 DIVULSION. n. f. [divulsi, Lat.] The act of plucking away.
 Aristotle, in his Ethicks, takes up the conceit of the beaver, and the divulsion of his testicles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DIZZEN. v. a. [This word seems corrupted from dight.]

All on a sudden miserable pain
 Surpriz'd thee, dinn thine eyes, and dizzy swam
 In darkness. Milton.

2. Causing giddiness.

How fearful
 And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!
 The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,
 Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakespeare.

3. Giddy; thoughtless.

What followers, what retinue canst thou gain?
 Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude,
 Longer than thou canst feed them on thy coast? Milton.

To DI'ZZY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To whirl round; to make giddy.

Not the dreadful spout,
 Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
 Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
 In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomede. Shakespeare.

To DO. v. a. preter. did; part. pass. done. [non, Sax. deon, Dut.]

1. To practise or act any thing good or bad.

Thou hast done evil above all that were before thee. 1 Kings.

Flee evil, and do good. Psalms.

2. To perform; to achieve.

They help, who hurt so small;
 And he hath nothing done, that doth not all. Daniel.

Learn to live well, that thou mayst die too;
 To live and die is all we have to do. Denham.

What is the reason a man's arm won't finile and frown, and do all the intellectual postures of the countenance? Collier.

3. To execute; to discharge.

May one, that is a herald and a prince,
 Do a fair message to his kingly ears? Shakespeare.

Do to thy salutation from his master. Shakespeare.

4. To cause.

A fatal plague which many did to dye.
 Nought can quench mine only flaming fire,
 Nor fear of liquor cold, nor lake of mire,
 Nothing but death can do me to respire. Spenser.

5. To transact.

The thing was not done in a corner. Acts.

6. To produce any effect to another.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waded indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature thame. Shakespeare.

If there be any good thing to be done,
 That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
 Speak to me. Shakespeare.

'Tis true, I did so; nor was it in vain:
 She did me right, and satisfy'd my vengeance. Rome.

You do her too much honour: she hath neither sense nor taste, if she dares to refuse you. Swift.

7. To have recourse to; to practise as the last effort, commonly in the form of a passionate interrogation.

What will ye do in the end thereof? Jeremiah.

I know what God will do for me. 1 Samuel.

Act of merry done to the poor, shall then be accepted, and rewarded, as done to our Saviour himself. Atterbury.

8. To exert; to put forth.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Timothy.

10. To manage by way of intercourse or dealing; to have business; to deal.

No man, who hath to do with the king, will think himself safe, unless you be his good angel, and guide him. Bacon.

I have been deterred by an indisposition from having much to do with dreams of so dangerous a nature. Byss.

What had I to do with kings and courts?

My humble let had cast me far beneath them. Rome.

11. To gain a point; to effect by influence.

It is much, that a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. Shakespeare.

His queen, notwithstanding she had presented him with divers children, and with a crown also, though he would not acknowledge it, could do nothing with him. Bacon.

12. To make any thing what it is not.

Off with the crown, and with the crown his head;
 And whilst we breathe take him to do him dead. Shakespeare.

13. To finish; to end.

As for this mercy,
 Which he intends for Lear and for Cordelia,
 The battle done, and they within our power,
 Shall never fee his pardon. Shakespeare.

Go on to the reading of some part of the New Testament, not carefully, or in haste, as if you had a mind to have done, but attentively, as to be able to give some account of what you have read.

Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
 To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run. Dryden.

14. To conclude; to settle.

When all is done, there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Tillotson.

15. To put.

Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death? Shakespeare.

The lord Aubrey Vere,
 Was done to death? Shakespeare.

16. This phrase, what to do with, signifies how to behave; what use to make of; what course to take; how to employ; which way to get rid of.

Men are many times brought to that extremity, that if it were not for God, they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour. Tillotson.

To DO. v. n.

1. To act or behave in any manner well or ill.

Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob. 2 Kings.

As every prince should govern as he would desire to be governed, to every subject ought to obey as he would desire to be obeyed, according to the maxim of doing as we would be done by. Temple.

2. To make an end; to conclude.

You may ramble a whole day, and every moment discover something new; but when you have done, you will have a confused notion of the place. Swift.

3. To cease to be concerned with; to cease to care about; to desist from notice or practice.

No men would make use of disunited parties to destroy one body, unless they were sure to master them when they had done with them. Stillingfleet.

I have done with Chaucer, when I have answered some objections. Dryden.

We have not yet done with assenting to propositions at last hearing, and understanding their terms. Locke.

Having done with such amusements, we give up what we cannot down. Pope.

4. To fare; to be with regard to sickness or health.

Good woman, how dost thou?

—The better that it pleases your good worship to ask. Shakespeare.

5. To succeed; to fulfil a purpose.

Come, 'tis no matter; we shall do without him. Alfina.

You would do well to prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and, if that won't do, challenge the crown. Collier.

6. To do is used for any verb to save the repetition of the word; as, I shall come, but if I do not, go away; that is, if I come not.

Thus painters Cupid paint, thus poets do

A naked god, blind, young, with arrows two. Sibney.

If any thing in the world deserve our serious study and consideration, those principles of religion do. Tillotson.

Take all things which relax the veins; for what does do, prevents too vigorous a motion through the arteries. Arriano.

7. Do is a word of vehement command, or earnest request; as, help me, do; make haste, do.

If thou shalt lift thy land, do not also lose thy constancy; and if thou must die a little sooner, yet do not die impatiently. Temple.

I am enfeared; and gives my wings:

—Loose me.—I will free thee. Dryden.

—Do, and I'll be thy slave.

8. To do is put before verbs sometimes expletively; as, I do love, or, I love; I did love, or, I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest.

This just reproach their virtue does excite;

They stand, they join, they thicken to the fight. Dryden.

Expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

9. Sometimes emphatically; as, I do hate him, but will not wrong him.

Perdition catch my soul

But I do love thee; and when I love thee not, Shakespeare.

Chaos is come again. 10. Same.

10. Sometimes by way of opposition; as, I did love him, but soon him now.

To DOAT, v. n. See To DOTE.

DOCHILE, adj. [dochile, Latin.] Traffable; docile; easy to be taught.

The African feast of two-thistles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderness and most docile age. Milton.

DOCTILNESS, n. f. [from docile.] Teachableness; docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docility of dogs in general. Warton.

DOCTILE, adj. [docilis, Latin.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being do ile and tractable, are very useful. Ellis.

2. With it before the thing taught.

Soon do ile to the secret arts of ill, With smiles I could betray, with temper kill. Prior.

DOCTILITY, n. f. [doctitas, French, from doctus, Lat.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and doctility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous. South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? The doctility of an elephant, and the industry of a camel for travelling in deserts? Grew.

DOCK, n. f. [bocca, Saxon.]

The cup of the flower consists of six leaves, three large, and red; the other three lesser, and green; in the middle of the cup are placed six stamens. The three outer small leaves of the cup fall away, when ripe; but the three inner large leaves join together, and form a triangular covering, in the middle of which are contained three shining corned seeds. The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb. Müller.

Nothing teems But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs, Losing both beauty and utility. Shakspeare.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows Than yon tall dock that rises to thy noise: Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know Love rooted out, again will never grow. Swift.

DOCK, n. f. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bonatus. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula. Grew.

DOCK, n. f. [As some imagine of doctus.] A place where water is let in or out of pleasure, where fish are built or laid up.

There are docks for their gallees and men of war, most of them full; as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations. Addison.

To DOCK, v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

2. To cut any thing short.

One or two flood constant centry, who docked all favours handed down; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass. Swift.

3. To cut off a reckoning; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DOCKET, n. f. A direction tied upon goods; a summary of a larger writing. Dick.

DOCTOR, n. f. [doctus, Latin.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physic. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it. No woman had it, but a civil doctor.

Who did relate three thousand ducats of me, And begg'd the ring. Shakspeare.

Then flood there up one in the council, a pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws. Acts.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scrippures made their pride, Casuists, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes. Denham. Each profligate would vote his doctor bill, With absolute exclusion to the rest. Dryden.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases. By medical life may be prolonged, yet death Will seize the doctor too. Shakspeare.

How does your patient, doctor?

—Not so sick, my lord,

As he is troubled with thick coming fancies. Shakspeare. Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother. Gos. of Tazewell.

To 'pottecanes let the learn'd prescribe; Let men say without a double bribe: Let them, but under their superiors, kill, When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

Nº XLIII.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Catlin.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recover'd, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be the doctor. Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school. Digby.

To D.DCTOR, v. a. [from the noun.] To physic; to cure; to treat with medicines. A low word.

DOCTORAL, adj. [doctoralis, Latin.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

DOCTORALLY, adv. [from doctus.] In manner of a doctor.

The physicians resorted to him to touch his ulcers, and consider of his disease doctorally at their departure. Latent L.

DOCTORSHIP, n. f. [from doctus.] The rank of a doctor. From a scholar he became a fellow, and then the president of the college, after he had received all the grades and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship, that could be obtained there. Clarendon.

DOCTRINAL, adj. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject. Scot.

Not such as assent to every word in Scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ. South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching.

To this end the word of God no otherwise ferveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument. Hesker.

What special property or quality is that, which, being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and kaveath all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy? Hesker.

DOCTRINALLY, adv. [from doctrina.] In the form of doctrine; positively; as necessary to be held.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual terms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points. Reg.

DOCTRINE, n. f. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or matter; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not either at one time or other? Hesker.

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them. Atterbury.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other. Watts.

2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine. Mark.

DOCUMENT, n. f. [documentum, Latin.]

1. Precept; instruction; direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behooveth them to shew themselves equal distributors. Bacon. Learners should not be too much croud'd with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time. Watts.

2. Precept in an ill sense; a precept infinitely authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard. Gos. of Tazewell.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes. Harv.

DODD: R. n. f. [uuteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Sinnerr.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed, soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away.

From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them in a very complicated manner. It has no leaves, but consists of such capillaments or stalks, as are brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have at certain distances tubercles, which fix them fall down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment. The flowers stand in a kind of little round clusters on the stalks, are small, of a whitish or pale redish colour, of the bell-falshioned kind, and deeply divided into four or five segments at the edge.

The flower is succeeded by a roundish fruit with three or four ridges, that give it a trigonal or tetragonal form: this has only one cavity. The seeds are numerous: these fall upon the ground, and produce young plants. Hill.

DODDER, n. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder: covered with supererect plants.

Near the hearth a lawrd grew, Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round The household gods, and shade the holy ground. Dryden.

The peasants were enjoin'd
Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find. Dryden.
DODDER-CAGON. n. f. [δωδερ and γωνία.] A figure of twelve fides.

DODECATEMERON. n. f. [δωδεκατεμεριον.] The twelfth part.
'Tis dodecateron thus describ'd :
Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains ;
It follows freight, that every twelfth confines
Two whole, and one half portion of the signs. Creech.

TO DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog ; to shift and play fly tricks like a dog.]

1. To use craft ; to deal with tergiversation ; to play mean tricks ; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgie and dodge in the amends. Hale.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodge- ing and shewing tricks with God. South.

2. To shift place as another approaches.
For he had, any time this ten years full,

Dodge'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull. Milt. n.
3. To play fast and loose ; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me : she dodge'd with me above thirty years. Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

DODKIN. n. f. [dykten, Dutch.] A doikoin or little doot ; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

I would not buy them for a doikin. Lily.

DODMAN. n. f. The name of a fish.
Thotic that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hoddmandol, or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

DOE. n. f. [ba, Saxon ; dau, Danish.] A she-deer ; the female of a buck.

Then but forbear your food a little while,
While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn, Shakespeare.
And give it food. Bacon.

Ducks have horns, does none.
The fearful doe

And flying stag amidst the greyhounds go. Dryden.

DOE. n. f. [from To do.] A feat ; what one has to do ; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into
The world, but he has done his doe. Hudibras.

DO'ER. n. f. [from To do.] One that does any thing good or bad.

So foul a thing, O ! thou Injustice art,
That tort'rest both the doer and distrust. Daniel.

It may be indeed a publick crime, or a national mischief ;
yet it is but a private act, and the doer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption. South.

2. Actor ; agent.
Sixth thus far we have proceeded in opening the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten. Hooker.

3. Performer.
Then have they most commonly one, who judgeth the prize to the best doer, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs. Sidney.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person.
Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate ;
Talkers are no good doers : be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues. Shakespeare.

They are great speakers, but small doers ; greater in shew than in deed. Knellies.

5. One that habitually performs or practises.
Be doers of the word, and not hearers only. Comm. Prayer.

In this we shew ourselves weak, and unapt to be doers of his will, in that we take upon us to be controllers of his wisdom. Hooker.

DOES. The third person from do for doth.
Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries. Lacks.

TO DORF. v. a. [from do off.]
1. To put off dress.

You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us dorf our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel. Shakespeare.

Dorf those links. Milton.

Nature, in awe to him,
Had dorf'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.

That judge is hot, and dorf's his gown ; while this O'er night was bowly ;
So many rubs appear, the time is gone
For hearing, and the tedious suit goes on. Dryden.

Alcides dorf's the lion's tawny hide. Ross.

2. To strip.
Why art thou troubled, Herod ? What vain fear
Thy blood-reviving breast doth move ?
Heaven's king, who dorf's himself our flesh to wear,
Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love. Crispian.

3. To put away ; to get rid of.
Your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make women fight ;
To dorf their dire distresses. Shakespeare.

4. To shift off ; to delay ; to refer to another time.
Every day thou dorf'st me with some device, lago ; and rather keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. Shakespeare.

Away, I will not have to do with you.—
—Can't thou dorf me ? Shakespeare.

5. This word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks.

DOG. n. f. [dagge, Dutch.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species ; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bulldog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard ; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these forth every passion :
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shake.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as difficult species one from another, as a horse and a dog. Lacks.

The clamour roars of men and boys, and dogs,
Ere the soft fearful people, to the flood Commit their woolly fides. Trovan.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dog days.

Among the southern constellations two there are who bear the name of the dog ; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus. Brown's Vulgar Errata.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides,
And Argo's keel that broke the frosty tides. Crom.

3. A reproachful name for a man.
I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets. Shakespeare.

Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers. Phil. ii. 2.

4. To give or send to the Dogs ; to throw away. To go to the Dogs ; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.
Had whole Colepeper's wealth been hops and hogs,
Could he himself have sent it to the dogs ? Pope.

5. It is used as the term for the male of several species ; as the dog fox, the dog otter.
If ever I thank any man, I'll thank you ; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes. Shakespeare.

6. Dog is a participle added to any thing to mark meanness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness ; as dog role.
To Dog. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt as a dog, industriously and indefatigably. Shakespeare.

I have dogg'd him like his murderer.
His taken labours bid him me forgive ;
I, his despicable Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to fire,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakespeare.

Sorrow *dogg*ing sin,
Afflictions forced.
These spiritual joys are *dogg*ed by no such sad sequels as are the products of those titillations, that reach no higher than fancy and the senses. Glenn.

I have been pursued, *dogg*ed, and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure. Pope.

Hate dogs their rife, and insult mocks their fall.
Vanity of Human Wifdom. Vanity of Human Wifdom.

DOG-TEETH. n. f. [dog and teeth.] The teeth in the human head next to the grinders ; the eye-teeth.

The best instruments for dividing of herbs are incisor teeth ;
for cracking of hard substances, as bones and nuts, grinders ;
for dividing of flesh, sharp-pointed or dog- teeth. Arbuthnot.

DOG-TRICK. n. f. [dog and trick.] An ill turn ; a surly or brutal treatment.
Learn better manners, or I shall serve you a dog-trick :
come, down upon all four immediately ; I'll make you know your rider. Dryden.

DUGBANE. n. f. [dog and bane.]
The leaves are produc'd opposite by pairs upon the branches :
the flower consists of one leaf, cut into several segments : from its flower-cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail in the back-part of the flower. Milner.

DOGBERRY-TREE. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY.
DO'GHOLT. n. f. [dog and holt.] Of this word I know not the meaning, unless it be, that when meal or flower is sifted or bolted to a certain degree, the coarser part is called dogbolt or flower for dogs. H.

His only solace was, that now
His dogbolt fortune was so low,
'T'hat either it must quickly end,
Or turn about again, and mend.

Hudibras.

DOGBRIAR. n. f. [dog and briar.] The briar that bears the hip; the cynosbator.

DO'G'CHEAP. adj. [dog and cheap.] Cheap as dogs meat; cheap as the offal bought for dogs.

Good flore of harlots, say you, and dogcheap? Dryden.
DO'GDAYS. n. f. [dog and day.] The days in which the dog-star rises and sets with the sun, vulgarly reputed unwholesome.

Nor was it more in his power to be without promotion, and titles, and wealth, than for a healthy man to sit in the sun, in the brightest dogdays, and remain without warmth.

Clarendon.

DO'G'DRAW. n. f. [dog and draw.] A manifest deprehension of an offender against venison in the forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound which he leads in his hand.

DO'GGEREL. adj. [from dog.] Loosed from the measures of regular poetry; vile; despicable; mean.

Then hasten Og and Dog to rehearse,
Two fools that clutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse, to all succeeding times,
Shall live in spite of their own doggerel rhymes. Dryden.

Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all doggerel rhyme. Dryden.

It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispenfary; or in doggerel, like that of Hudibras. Aldisfin.

DO'GGEREL. n. f. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.

The hand and head were never lost of those Who dealt in doggerel, or who pin'd in prose. Dryden.

The vilest doggerel Grub-street sends,
Will pass for yours with foes and friends. Swift.

DO'G'GISH. adj. [from dog.] Curious; brutal.

DO'GHEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shakspeare.

DO'GHOLE. n. f. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.

France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakspeare.

But, could you be content to bid adieu
To the dear playhouses, and the players too,
Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,
With lands and gardens, at less price than here;

You hire a darksome doghole by the year. Dryden.

Load some vain church with old theatric state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate;
Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd doghole, ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

DO'GKENNEL. n. f. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

A certain nobleman, beginning with a dogkennel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden.

DO'GMATIST. n. f. [dogmatist, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive afterer; a bold advancer of principles.

I could describe the poverty of our intellectual acquisitions, and the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in. Gloverille.

A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts.

To DO'GMATIZE. v. n. [from dogma.] To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.

These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools,
Impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;

Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey,
And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way. Blackmore.

DOGMATIZER. n. f. [from dogmatize.] An afterer; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on Papists or Protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hamm.

DO'GROUSE. n. f. [dog and roze.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrescence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good influence. Darwin.

DO'G'SLEEP. n. f. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who raised an estate by sleeping; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dog's sleep. Aldisfin.

DO'G'SMEAT. n. f. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flower of all the market; these are but dog's meat. Dryden.

DO'GSTAR. n. f. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

All shun the raging dog-star's sultry heat,
And from the half-unpeopled town retreat. Aldisfin.

DO'G'STOOTH. n. f. [from dog and tooth.] A plant.

It hath a fleshy root, shaped like a dog's tooth: the leaves are broad, and spread upon the ground: the flower is naked, and produced single upon each stalk, each consisting of six leaves, shaped like a lily, and hanging downward. The point of the flower becomes a roundish fruit, containing oblong seeds: they produce their flowers early in March, for which they are valued. Miller.

DO'G'TROT. n. f. [dog and trot.] A gentle trot like that of a dog.

This said, they both advanc'd, and rode
A dogtrot through the bawling crowd. Hudibras.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,
That I'm dogwary. Shakspeare.

DO'GWOOD. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

DO'ILY. n. f. A species of woollen stuff, so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool and a doily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve.

DO'INGS. n. f. [from To do.] This word has hardly any singular.

1. Things done; events; transactions.
I have but kill'd a fly.
— But! how if that fly had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamented doings in the air? Shakspeare.
2. Feats; actions: good or bad.
'The next degree was to mark all Zelmane's doings, speeches and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding.
If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing; let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakspeare.
At length a reviv'd fire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,
And selfi'd against their ways. Milton.
3. Behaviour; conduct.
Never the earth on his round shoulders bare,
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
That in her doings better could compare
Mirth with respect, few words with curtesy. Sidney.
4. Conduct; dispensation.
After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms. Swift.
Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High. Hooker.
5. Stir; bustle; tumult.
Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings? Heeler.

mean language.
DOIT. n. f. [doigt, Dutch; daygt, Erfc.] A small piece of money.
When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Shakspeare.
In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
'Tis'd with a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit. Pope.
- DOLE. n. f. [from dol; exlan, Saxon.]
1. The act of distribution or dealing.
'The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner.
At her general dole
Each receives his ancient foul. Cleaveland.
2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.
Now, my masters, happy man be his dole say I; every man to his business. Shakspeare.
Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and money man be's dole. Hudibras.
3. Provision or money distributed in charity.
They had such firm dependance on the day,
That Need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, so ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to feed the manna fall.
Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd. Dryden.
4. Blows dealt out.
It was your preface,
That in the dole of blows your foe might drop. Shakspeare.
What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd?
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And o'er heaps of slaughter'd walk his way? Milton.
5. [from doler.] Grief; sorrow; misery.
Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping. Shakspeare.
Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defecated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakspeare.
They might hope to change
Torment with ease, and soonest recompense Dole with delight. Milton.
- TO DOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To deal; to distribute. Diit.

she might comfort, or accompany her doleful humour. Sidney.
For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread to doleful lay. Spenser.
With fereced face, and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances.
South's Sermons.

- Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those absent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins. Dryden.
2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief.
How oft my doleful fire cry'd to me, tarry, son,
When first he spy'd my love! Sidney.
3. Dismal; impending sorrow.
It waiteeth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh
the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befall men in this present life. Hester.
- From those flames
No light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover fights of woe,
Regions of sorrow! doleful shades! where peace
And rest can never dwell! Milton.
Happy the mortal man! who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of misery past:
Who to his destin'd flag he carry'd on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down. Prior.
- DOLEFULLY. adv. [from doleful.] In a doleful manner; for-rowfully; dismal; querulously.

different value, from about two shillings and sixpence to four and sixpence.
He disburs'd, at St. Colmeskill isle,
Ten thousand dollars for our gen'l use. Shakspeare.
- DOLORIFICK. adj. [dolorificus, Latin.] That which causes grief or pain.
The pain then by degrees returned, which I could attribute to nothing but the dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again.
Roy on the C-estion.
- This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid, is infensible, and not dolorifick. Arbutnot.
- DOLEFULNESS. adj. [from doler, Latin.]
1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy.
We are taught by his example, that the presence of dolor- ous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all feasonable joy. Hester.
You take me to too dolorous a sense:
I spake 't you for your comfort. Shakspeare.
Through many a dark and dreary vale
They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp,
Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- Talk not of ruling in this dolous gloom,
Nor think vain words, he cry'd, can ease my doom. Pope.
2. Painful.
Their dispatch is quick, and less dolorous than the paw of the bear, or teeth of the lion. Mars.
- DOLEUR. n. f. [dolor, Latin.]
1. Grief; sorrow.
I've words too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal,
To breathe th' abundant dolor of the heart. Shakspeare.
2. Lamentation; complaint.

A mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good, doth avert the dolors of death. Bacon.
- DOLEPHIN. n. f. [dolphin, Latin; though the dolphin is supposed to be not the same fish.] The name of a fish.
His delights
Were dolphin like; they shew'd his back above
The element they liv'd in. Shakspeare.
You may draw boys riding upon goats, eagles, and dol- phins. Pracham.
- DOLT. n. f. [dolt, Teutonic.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thickskull; a loggerhead.
Let dolts in haste some altar fair erect
To those high powers, which idly fit above. Sidney.
Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,
As I have to be hurt: oh, gull! oh, dolt! Shakspeare.
As ignorant as dirt!
Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,
Who, ere the blow, become mere dolts;
They

They neither have the hearts to slay,
Nor wit enough to run away.

Hudibras.

Wood's adulterate copper,
Which, as he scatter'd, we like dolts,
Mistook at first for thunder-bolts.

Swift.

Do-LTISH. adj. [from dolt.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.
Dametas, the most arrant doltish clown, that ever was without the privilege of a bauble.

Sidney.

1. A building; a house; a fabric.

Best be he call'd among good men,
Who to his God this column rais'd:

Prior.

Though lightning fluke the dome again,
The man who built it shall be prais'd.
Stranger! whose'er thou art, securely rest,
Affranc'd in my faith, a friendly guest;
Approach the dome, the social banquet share,
And then the purpose of thy soul declare.

Pope.

2. A hemispherical arch; a cupola.

DOMESTICAL. } adj. [domesticus, Latin.]

DOMESTICK. }

1. Belonging to the house; not relating to things publick.

all times, are often permitted to run on forward, till it be too late to recall them.

Hosier.

Equality of two domestick pow'rs

Breeds scrupulous faction.

Shakespeare.

Combine together, 'gainst the enemy;

For these domestick and particular broils

Are not the question here.

Shakespeare.

Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, theirs must needs be who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestick dissensions.

King Charles.

Such they were, who might presume to have done

Much for the king and honour of the state;

Having the chiefest actions undergone,

Both foreign and domestick of late.

Daniel.

uses.

DONATION. n. f. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl

Dominate absolute; that right we hold

By his donation.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given, and that as to the use of it too; which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money.

South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all.

Raleigh.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,

Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd,

Other donation none thou can'st produce.

Milton.

DONATIVE. n. f. [donativ, French; from donatus, Latin.]

times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donative

they received, wearing garlands upon their heads.

They were entertained with publick shows and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either a presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders.

Never did steeples carry double tress;

His is the donative, and mine the cure.

Cleland.

DONE. part. pass. of the verb To do

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,

Whereof who'd did eat, ekefions did know

Both good and evil: O mournful memory!

That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye.

Spryer.

DONE.

DOO

DONE, a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded; when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager?

Shakespeare.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;

Take me for a new-fashioned mask.

—Done: but my bargain, shall be this,

Cleveland.

I'll throw my mask off when I kiss.

'Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be L'Estrange.

DONJON, n. f. [now corrupted to dungeon, from dominium, low Latin, according to Ménage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer.

DOOM, n. f. [boom, Saxon; doom, Dutch.]

1. Final sentence; judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;

Shakespeare.

And humbly thus with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd,
'T'houg in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best.

Milton.

And now, without redemption all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell

Milton.

By doom severe.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or excusing him.

Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windsor-castle, elves within and out:
Strew good luck, Ouphes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand 'till the perpetual doom.

Shakespeare.

3. Condemnation.

Revoke thy doom,

Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou do'st evil.

Shakespeare.

4. Determination declared.

—Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford.

Shakespeare.

DOST. [the second person of do.]

Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead

Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow?

Addison.

DOT. n. f. [This is derived by Stimmer from dottier, German, the white of an egg, and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jet, a point.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing.

TO DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots, or spots.

DOTAGE. n. f. [from dot.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The foul in all hath one intelligence;

Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,

And too much driness in an old man's sense,

Cannot the prints of outward things retain:

Then doth the foul want work, and idle sit,

And this we childishness and dotage call.

Deviiti

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts

As joyful as our hearts:

Our senses tell us, if we please not them;

Our love is but a dotage, or a dream.

Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,

Thank that fond dotage, which so much you scorn. Dryden.

DO'TAL. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Reating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town posselt,

My people thine, my wretched country waste?

An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,

Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own?

Garrick.

DO'TARD. n. f. [from dot.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood; called in some provinces a twichild.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advice,

Seems that through many years thy wit was three fold,

And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise;

Else never should thy judgment be so frail.

Spenser.

The sickly dotard wants a wife,

To draw off his last dregs of life.

Prior.

DO'TATION. n. f. [dotatio, Latin.] The act of giving a dowry or portion.

Dick.

TO DOTE. v. n. [doten, Dutch; radater, French.]

1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death make me dot,

I see my fon.

Shakespeare.

A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dot: a sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jer. l. 36.

Time has made you dot, and vainly tell

Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell:

Go, be the temple and the gods your care;

Permit to men the thought of peace and war.

Dryden.

When an old woman begins to dot, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies.

Addison.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that, 'till I was fain to get this place, sometimes to retire in freely: I was even choked with his tediousness. Sidney.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting observance. Shakespeare.

TO DOTE UPON. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love

Were set on herford, whom they doted on,

And blest'd, and grac'd.

Shakespeare.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,

Because thou seest me dot upon my love.

Shakespeare.

All the beauties of the court besides,

Are mad in love, and dot upon your person.

Denham.

Mark those who dot on arbitrary power,

And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,

Or needy bankrupts.

Dryden.

Would you so dot upon your first desire,

As not to entertain a nobler fire?

Dryden.

We dot upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctance, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Burnet.

O death, all eloquent! you only prove

What dust we dot on, when 'tis man we love.

Pope.

DO'TER. n. f. [from dot.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,

It mourns that painting and usurping hair

Should ravish doters with a false aspect;

And therefore is the born to make black fair.

Shakespeare.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed, by the uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Bayle.

DO'TINGLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,

Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid!

Dryden.

DO'TTARD. n. f. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in churchyards, or near ancient buildings, and the like are pollards and dotards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

DO'TTEREL. n. f. [from dot.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dottrelts, we see how motions of man; and in catching of dottrelts, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

DOUBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Latin; duple, Erse.]

DOUBLE-PLEA. n. f. [duplex placitum, Latin.] Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, wherof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowell.

DOUBLE-QUARREL, is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentic seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official: and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowell.

DOUBLE is much used in composition, generally for double, two ways; as double edged, having an edge on each side; or for twice the number or quantity, as double died, twice died.

DOUBLE-BITING. adj. [double and bite.] Biting or cutting on either side.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend, His rising muscles and his brawn commanding; His double-biting ax, and beamy spear, Dryden.

Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly,
When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky;
Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
When through the skies he drives the trembling doves. Pepr.
2. A pigeon.
I have here a dish of doves, that I will bestow upon your worship. Shakespeare.
DOVICOT. n. f. [dove and cot.] A small building in which pigeons are bred and kept.
Like an eagle in a devocat, I Flutter'd your Volcians in Coriol; Shakespeare.
DOVEHOUSE. n. f. [dove and house.] A house for pigeons.
The hawk sets up for protector, and makes havock in the devocat. Dryden.
But still the dovehouse obstinately flood.
DOVE-TAIL. n. f. [dove and tail.] A form of joining two bodies together, where that which is inserted has the form of a wedge reversed, and therefore cannot fall out.
DOUGH. n. f. [sah, Saxon; deugh, Dutch.]
1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.
When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians. Dryden.
You that from plant paste would fabrick raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know
Their pow'r to knead, and give the form to dough. King.
2. My cake is DOUGH. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.
My cake is dough, but I'm in among the rest;
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. Shakespeare.
DOUGHBAKED. adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.
For when, through tailfeats flat humility,
In doughbaked men some harmlessfines we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.
DOUGHTY. adj. [bohty, Saxon; dought, virtue, Dutch.]
1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent. Used of men and things.
Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ning courage of that fairy knight,
Devising how that doughty tournament,
With greatest honour, he achieve might. Spenser.
2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.
If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left,
he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet.
She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again; Pepr.
DOUGHY. adj. [from dough.] Unfouled; soft; unhardened.
Your son was misled with a snipet taffata fellow there, whose villanous fassiron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakespeare.
T_Y DOUSE. v. a. [douse; but probably it is a cant word formed from the found.] To put over head suddenly in the water.
T_O DOUSE. v. n. To fall suddenly into the water.
It is no jelling, trivial matter,
To living i' th' air, or douse in water. Hudibras.
DOUGER. n. f. [douairier, French.]
1. A widow with a jointure.
she lingers my desires,
Like to a stepdame of a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue. Shakespeare.
Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.
Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but prince's dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare.
DO-WEY. n. f. An awkward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench; Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a giddy; Helen and Hero, flinders and harlots. Shakespeare.
The bedlam train of lovers use
T' enhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.
No housewifery the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confel'd the shrew. Goy.
DOWER. n. f. [douaire, French.]
DOWERY. n. f. [douaire, French.]
1. That which the wife bringeth to her husband in marriage.
His wife brought in dow'r Clizia's crown,
And in herself a greater dow'r alone. Dryden.
His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;
For very want, he could not pay a dow'r. Pope.
2. That which the widow possesseth.
His patrimonial territories of Flanders were partly in dowry to his mother-in-law, and partly not servicable, in respect of the late rebellions. Bacon.
3. The gifts of a husband for a wife.
Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife. Greffu.
4. Endowment; gift.
What spreading virtue, what a sparkling fire;
How great, how plentiful, how rich a dow'r,
Do'st thou within this dying flesh inspire! Devins.
DOW'ERED. adj. [from dower.] Portioned; supplied with a portion.
Will you with those infirmities the owes,
Unfriended, new-adapted to our hate,
Dow'r'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her. Shakespeare.
DOW'ERLESS. adj. [from dower.] Without a fortune; un-portioned.
Thy dow'rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, and ours, and our fair France. Shakespeare.
DOW'LAS. n. f. A coarse kind of linen.
Dowlas, filthy dowlas; I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made boulders of them. Shakespeare.
DOWN. n. f. [doun, Danish.]
1. Soft feathers.
Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of doun. Wotton.
Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nureth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding doun doth dim.
Lie tumbling on our doun, courting the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber. Dromen.
A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of doun beds. Lute.
2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.
Thou bosome softness! doun of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy. Southey.
3. Soft wool, or tender hair.
Scarce had the doun to shade his cheeks begun;
One was their care, and their delight was one. Dryden.
I am not chang'd, I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first doun began to shade his face. Dryden.
On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful doun, and promise man. Prior.
4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seeds.
Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind,
Sweath a wind at hand; as when feathers, or doun of children, fly to and fro in the air. Bacon.
Like scatter'd doun by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.
DOWN. n. f. [doun, Saxon; dune, Erse, a hill; but it is used now as if derived from the adverb.]
1. A large open plain, or valley.
On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A half-nud hare from greedy greyhound go.
Lord of much riches, which the eye renowns;
Seven thousand broad-trail'd sheep graze on his downs. Sandys.
Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich those duns is worth a thought,
To this my errand, and the care it brought.
How Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless duns. Goy.
To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a dun. Pope.
2. A hill; a rising ground. This sense is very rare. Hall

DOW

Hills afford pleasant prospects; as they must needs acknowledge who have been on the down of Suffolk. Ray.

Down, prep. [adown, Saxon.]

1. Along a descent; from a higher place to a lower.

Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down hill, left it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw after. Shakespeare.

A man falling down a precipice, though in motion, is not at liberty, because he cannot stop that motion if he would. Locke.

 God.

David breaks forth into these triumphant praises and doxolo- gies express'd in the text; Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who has kept me this day from shedding blood, and from avenging myself with my own hand. South.

Little did Athanasius imagine, that ever it would have been received in the Christian church, to conclude their books with a doxology to God and the blessed virgin. Stillingfleet.

DUXY. n. f. A whore; a loose wench.

When daffadils begin to pure, Shakespeare.

With heigh! the duxy over the dale. Shakespeare.

To DOZE. v. n. [doze, Saxon; doet, Dutch.] To slumber;
 to live in a state of drowsiness; to be half asleep.

There was no sleeping under his roof: if he happened to doze a little, the jolly coobler waked him. L'Estrange.

It has happened to young men of the greatest wit to wait their spirits with anxiety and pain, so far as to doze upon their work with too much eagerness of doing well. Dryden.

How to the banks, where bards departed doze,

They led him soft; how all the bards arose. Pope.

Chieftest armies doz'd out the campaign,

And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Pope.

To DOZE. v. a. To stupify; to dull.

He was now much decay'd in his parts, and with immoderate drinking doz'd in his understanding. Clarendon.

Two satyrs on the ground,

Stretch'd at his ease, their fire, Silenus, found

Do'ZEN. n. f. [dozaine, French.] The number of twelve.

We cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight.

Shakespeare.

'That they bear such huge leaves, or delicate fruit, I could never find; yet I have travelled a dozen miles together under them. Raleigh.

By putting twelve units together, we have the complex idea of a dozen. Locke.

The number of dissenters was something under a dozen
 with them. Swift.

DoZINESS. n. f. [from dozy.] Sleepiness; drowsiness.

A man, by a violent fit of the gout in his limbs, finds a doziness in his head, or a want of appetite. Locke.

DoZY. adv. [from doze.] Sleepy; drowsy; sluggish.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
 His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise. Dryden.

DRAB. n. f. [drabbie, Saxon, Ices.] A whore; a strumpet.

That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,

Must like a whore, unpack my heart with words,

And fall a cursing, like a very drab! Shakespeare.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not fear for the bawds. Shakespeare.

Babe,

Ditch-deliver'd by a drab. Shakespeare.

Curs'd be the wretch so venal, and so vain,

Paltry and proud as drabs in Drury-lane. Pope.

DRACHM. n. f. [drachma, Latin.]

1. An old Roman coin.

See here these movers, that do prize their honours

At a crack'd drachm. Shakespeare.

 countries, which grows to many yards length between the skin and flesh.

DRAD. adj. [for dread, or the preterit of To dread.] Terrible;
 formidable; dreaded.

Th' utmost land-breach they shortly fetch,

Whilst the drad danger does behind remain. Swaffer.

DRAFF. n. f. [drap, dirty, Saxon; drap, Dutch, the sediment of ale.] Any thing thrown away; sweepings; refuse; see, draps.

You would think I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating drap and husks. Shakespeare.

'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste

On such as have no taste;

To offer them a surfeit of pure bread

Whose appetite is dead!

No, give them grains their fill;

Huiks, drap, to drink and swell. Bacon.

I call'd, and drew them thither,

My hell-hounds to lick up the drap and filth,

Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed

On what was pure. Milton.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,

'Till vermin, or the drap of servile food,

Consume me. Milton.

As Muley-Zeydan were not worth their care,

And younger brothers but the drap of nature.

DRAFFY. adj. [from drap.] Worthless; dreggy.

DRAFT. adj. [corrupt for draught.]

Ulysses and old Nestor yoke you like drift oxen, and make you plough up the war. Shakespeare.

To DRAG. v. a. [draggon, Saxon.]

1. To pull along the ground by main force; to draw heavily along.

Such his aspect, when, foil'd with bloody dust,

Dragg'd by the cords which thro' his feet were thrust. Dodd.

2. To draw any thing burthenfome; any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.

'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife,

Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a ling'ring life. Dryden.

Can I, who lov'd to well,

To part with all my bliss to save my lover?

Oh! can I drag a wretched life without him? South.

While I have any ability to hold a commerce with you, I will never be silent; and this chancing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag it as long as I am able. South.

3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.

They shall surprise

The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chain

Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.

To fall, that's justice;

But then, to drag him after! For to die,

And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryden.

He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels, but he makes a show of me. Stillingfleet.

4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.

The constable was no sooner espied but he was reproach'd with disdainful words, beaten and dragg'd in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escap'd with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.

In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;

The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down. Dryden.

To DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains

Of foundering lasses, and of dragging chains. Dryden.

A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Milton.

DRAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.

Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,

Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on hooks. Dryden.

The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgments to them is just the same as returning our acknowledgments to the drag, and sacrificing to the net. Rogers.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.

You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook, or otherwise. Walton.

3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.

The drag is made somewhat like a low car: it is used to the carriage of timber, and then is drawn by the handle by two or more men.

DRA'GNET. n. f. [drag and net.] A net which is drawn along the bottom of the water.

Dragnets were made to fish within the deep,

And callingsnets did rivers bottoms sweep.

Some fishermen, that had been out a while day with a dra-net, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, that came home very heavy, which put them in hope of a flurgeon at last.

One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a drag-net, great and small.

Whatever old time, with his huge drag-net, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages, whether it be shells or shellfish, jewels or pebbles, flicks or straws, seaweeds or mud, these are the ancient, these are the fathers.

DRA'GON. v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.

You'll see a dragged damsel, here and there,

From Billingsgate her fifty traffick bear.

He wore the same gown five years, without dragging or tearing.

DRA'GON. v. n. To grow dirty by being drawn along the ground.

His dragging tail hung in the dirt,

Which on his rider he would flurt.

DRA'GON. n. f. [draco, Latin; dragon, French.]

1. A kind of winged serpent, perhaps imaginary, much celebrated in the romances of the middle age.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen

Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than fen.

Swift, swift, you dragons of the night! that dawning

May bear the raven's eye.

And you, ye dragons of the faly race,

Whom glittering gold and flaming armour grace;

In o'er nations' handless are you found.

Their guardian genii and protectors round.

On fiery volumes there a dragon rides;

Here, from our strict embrace, a stream he glides.

2. A fierce violent man or woman.

3. A constellation near the North pole.

DRA'GON. n. f. [draconum, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves are like those of arum, but divided into many parts; the stalk is spotted; but, in other respects, it agrees with the arum.

DRA'GONET. n. f. [from drag.] A little dragon.

Or in his womb might lurk some hidden nest

Of many dragons, his fruitful feed.

DRA'GONFLY. n. f. [dragon and fly.] A fierce stinging fly.

The body of the cautharides is bright coloured; and it may be, that the delicate coloured dragonsflies may have likewise some corrosive quality.

DRA'GONIST. adj. [from drag.] Having the form of a dragon; dragonlike.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish;

A vapour sometimes like a bare or lion.

DRA'G-LIKE. adj. [dragon and like.] Furious; fiery.

He fights drag-like, and does achieve as soon

As draw his sword.

DRA'GON-SLOOD. n. f. [dragon and blood.] So called from a false opinion of the dragon's combat with the elephant.

Dragon blood is a resin, so oddly named as to seem to have been imagined an animal production. It is moderately heavy, triable, and dusky red; but of a bright scarlet, when powdered; it has little smell, and is of a refinous and astringent taste. One sort is very compact; another sort less compact, and less pure, is called common dragonsblood. A third sort is tough and viscous, and of a blood colour; and in keeping it grows hard, like the first sort. Four vegetables afford dragonsblood: one is a tall tree in the Canaries; the sanguis draconis exudes from the cracks of the bark in the great heats.

Another grows to six or eight feet high in the island of Java, where the resin is extracted from the fruit, about the size of a hazelnut, by boiling. A third is a tall tree in New Spain, and a true sanguis draconis flows from the trunk. The fourth grows in Java, and has a red bark; its trunk and large branches yield a refinous juice, which seems to be our finest sort of dragon blood.

Take dragonsblood, beat it in a mortar, and put it in a cloth with aqua vite, and strain them together.

DRA'GON-HEAD. n. f. A plant.

It hath a lobated flower, consisting of one leaf; whose upper lip, which is crested, and its under lip, which is divided into three segments, end in chaps or jaws, and have the representation of a dragon's head.

DRA'GON-TREE. n. f. See PALMTREE, of which it is a species.

This tree is common in the Madeira and Canary islands, where they grow to a considerable size; and from it is supposed that the dragonsblood is obtained.

DRA'GON. n. f. [from drag, German, to carry.] A kind of soldier that serves indifferently either on foot or horseback.

Two regiments of dragons followed much in the late action.

DRAGO'ON. v. a. [from the noun.] To persecute by abandoning a place to the rage of soldiers.

What art thou drawn among those heartless kinds? Shakspeare.
3. Open; put aside, or uncheck'd.
A curtain drawn, presented to our view
A town besieg'd. Dryden's Trojan War.
4. Evicerated.
There's no more faith in thee than in a fluted pine;
no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox. Shakspeare.
5. Induced as from some motive.
The Irish will be better drawn to the English than the English to the Irish government. Speyer on French.
As this friendship was drawn together by fear on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear. Hay.
- DRAW'WELL. n. f.* [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord.
The first conceit, tending to a watch, was a drawn die:
the people of old were wont only to let down a pitcher with a draw- cord, for as much water as they could easily pull up. Gower.
- To DRAWL. v. n. [from draw.] To utter any thing in a slow driveling way.
Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy trace
Through the long heavy page drawl on. Pope's Dunciad.

The drayplough is the best plough in Winter for mury days. Mortimer.

DRAZEL. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from drasfel, the scum or drofs of human nature; or from drasfel, French, a whore.]

A low, mean, worthless wretch.

As the devil uses witches,

To be their cully for a space,

That, when the time's expir'd, the drasels

For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD. n. f. [dræd, Saxon.]

1. Fear; terror; affright.

'Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatter bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare.

But was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson.

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terror of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Genesis.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

To thee, of all our good the sacred spring;

To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our solter king. Prior.

DREAD. adj. [dræd, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakespeare.

It cannot be, that thou hast murder'd him:
So should a murderer look, so dread, so grim. Shakespeare.

To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder. Shakespeare.

Amaze

Pe sure, and terror, seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountain upward turn'd. Milton.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

'Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,
Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton.

From this descent

Celestial virtues, rising will appear
More glorious, and more dread than from no fall. Milton.

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be intenduntur regiis, our dread sovereigns.

TO DREAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others, and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wate.

TO DREAD. v. n. To be in fear.

Dread not, neither be afraid of them. Deut.

DREADER. n. f. [from dread.] One that lives in fear.

I have suspended much of my pity towards the great dreaders of popery. Swift.

DREADFUL. a. f. [from dread and full.] Terrible; frightful; frightful.

Thy love, still arm'd with fate,
Is dreadful as thy hate. Granville.

DREADFULNESS. n. f. [from dreadful.] Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terror to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Holwell.

DREADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful.] Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews. Dryden.

DREADLESS. n. f. [from dreadless.] Fearless; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelma, to whom danger was then a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sidney.

DREADLESS. adj. [from dreadless.] Fearless; unafrighted; intrepid; unshaken; undaunted; free from terror.

Nº XLIV.

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou had'st done great tort Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen.

All night the dreadless angel, unpur'd,
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way. Milton.

DREAM. n. f. [dræm, Dutch. This word is derived by Merie Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from dræma τὸ βίαιον, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

ΣΑΝΝΙ ΠΑΙΣ ὁ βίαιον ἢ παρρησίαν ἢ μαζὶ παίζειται, Τὸν πρῶτον μαρτυρεῖ, ὃ φησι τὰς ὁμιλίας. Antol.

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep

In the affliction of those terrible dreams

That shake us nightly. Shakespeare.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread;

Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore. Dryden.

Glorious dreams stand ready to refigure

The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep

A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dilike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shakespeare.

TO DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, so that they receive not outward objects with their usual quickness, in the mind; not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shakespeare.

I have nightly since

Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare.

I dreamed that I was convey'd into a wide and boundless plain. Taylor.

2. To think; to imagine.

'These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shakespeare.

He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than the transient crust. Burnet.

He little dream'd how high he was to cure,
'Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare. Dryden.

3. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digressing. Locke.

I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Smith.

3. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
And tempts not to tious for a noble day? Dryden.

TO DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy. Dryden.

At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dream the future fight, and early rose. Dryden.

DREAMER. n. f. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fight. Dryden.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometime he angers me,
With telling of the moldwarp, and the ant,
Or dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakespeare.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a droll.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flours;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DREAMLESS. adj. [from dream.] Without dreams.

The savages of mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless. C Camden.

DREAM. adj. [dræm, Saxon, dicary.] Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
A dream and dying found
Affrights the flames at their service quaint. Milton.

DREAMTOLD. n. f. [from dream.] Horror; dismalness;
a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhood,
Such as the was when Pallas the attempted,

- She grew to hideous shape of dreadhead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented.
- DREAUMENT. n. f. [from dreary.]
1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.
I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful dreaument.
2. Horror; dread; terror. This word is now obsolete.
Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly food,
Inroll'd in flames and inmol'd ring dreaument.
DRE'ARY. adj. [by open, Saxon.]
1. Sorrowful; dreifull.
The messenger of death, the gally owl,
With dreary shrieks did also yell;
And hungry wolves continually howl
At her abhorred face, fo horrid and so foul.
2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.
Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led
Along the vast dominions of the dead.
Towns, forests, herds and men promiscuous drown'd;
With one great death deform the dreary ground.
DREDGE. n. f. [To dratch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often fopped may be called from this.] A kind of net.
For oysters, besides gathering by hand, at a great ebb, they have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spalls of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom of the water. Carew.
To DREDGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.
The oysters dredged in the Lyne, find a welcome acceptance.
DREDGER. n. f. [from dredge.] One who fishes with a dredge.
DREGGINESS. n. f. [from dreggy.] Fulness of dregs or lees;
foulness; muddiness; feculence.
DREGGISH. adj. [from dreggy.] Foul with lees; feculent.
To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they fling in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong.
DREGGY. adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.
These num'rous veins, such is the curious frame,
Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit;
To form the blood, or feed the limbs unfit.
Ripe grapes, being moderately pressed, their juice may without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out.
DREGS. n. f. [by open, Saxon; dreggion, Islandick.]
1. The sediment of liquors; the lees; the grounds; the fecu-lence.
Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could some other blame.
They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath.
We from the dregs of life think to receive,
What the first sprightly running could not give.
Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.
2. Anything by which purity is corrupted.
The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him.
3. Dregs; sweepings; refuse.
Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd,
Than we the dregs and rubbish of mankind.
What diffidence we must be under, whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure.
To DRAIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty.
I am sure I can fish it out of her: she is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but letting her mill agoings, and I can drain her of them all.
'Tis drain'd and empty'd of its poison now;
A cordial draught.
To DRENCH. v. a. [by open, Saxon.]
1. To wash; to soak; to steep.
In swimish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death.
Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses, being rather new-dy'd than stain'd with salt water.
To-day deep thoughts learn with me to drench
In mirth, that after no repenting draws.
Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;
Their moisture has already drench'd the plain.
2. To saturate with drink or moisture: in an ill sense.
Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd
Our swords in native blood.
3. To phycify by violence.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form.
Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd to-day! Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after.
A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd.
3. Phycify that must be given by violence.
Their counsels are more like a drench, that must be poured down, than a draught which might be leisurely drank, if I liked it.
4. A channel of water.
DRENCHER. n. f. [from drench.]
1. One that dips or steeps any thing.
2. One that gives phycify by force.
DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drench'd, to make a proverbial rhyme, brant or burnt.

In Orkney they dress their leather with the roots of tormentil, instead of bark.
8. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.
When he dresseth the lamps he shall burn incense.
When you dress your young hops, cut away roots or sprigs.
9. To prepare victuals for the table.
Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress
For his fat grandire some delicious mels,
In feeding high his tutor will surpass,
An heir apparent of the gourmand race.
DRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Cloaths; garment; habit.
Dress'd laugh'd at in our forefathers wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity, they are brought about, we think becoming.
A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,
A dress by fates and furies worn alone.
2. Splendid cloaths; habit of ceremony.
Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher.

'Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,

Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop. Dryd.

When fustious rage to cruel exile drove

The queen of beauty and the court of love, *Dryd.*The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts.I'll animate the soldiers drooping courage,With love of freedom and contempt of life. Addison.

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed he began very much to droop and languish. Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downwards.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray,

Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd *Milton.*Laborious, 'till day droop.

His head, though gay

Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold, *Milton.*Hung drooping, unsustain'd.On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,Which, with a sigh, she rais'd; and this she said. Pope.DROP, n. f. [Droppan, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the med'cine of our country's weal,

And with him pour we in our country's purge, Shaksp.

Each drop of us.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it:

he speaks, to my apprehension, very improbably. Boyle.

Admiring, in the gloomy shade,

Those little drops of light, Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,

I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood Dryden.

To have one drop of his.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brilliant, we consign;

And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.DROP SERENE, n. f. [gutta serena, Latin.] A disease of the eye, proceeding from an insipilation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,Or dim suffusion veil'd! *Milton.*To DROP, v. a. [Droppan, Saxon.]

1. To pour in drops or single globules:

His heavens shall drop down dew. Deut.

2. To let fall.

Others o'er chimney tops and turrets row,

And drop their anchors on the meads below. Dryd.

One only hag remain'd:

Against a wither'd oak the lean'd her weight,

Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright, *Dryd.*And dropp'd an awkward court'ry to the knight.

St. John himself will scarce forbear

To bite his pen and drop a tear;

The rest will give a shrug, and cry,

I'm sorry, but we all must die! Swift.

3. To let go; to dismis from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could.

With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,

And bid my will avouch it: yet I must not,

For certain friends that are both his and mine,

Whose loves I may not drop. Shaksp.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and disveit themselves of thosevisible shapes. Watt's Logic.

4. To intermit; or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac. Amos.

To interit indirectly, or by way of digression.

sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Chrys.

To fall spontaneously.

So may'st thou live, 'till, like ripe fruit, thou *drop*into thy mother's lap; or be with ease Milton.

Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd.

To fall in death; to die suddenly.

It was your prefigure,

That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Shaksp.

To die.

Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us. Dryd.

To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.

Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen.Addison's Travels.

I heard of threats, occasioned by my verks: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found, and so it dropp'd. Pope.

good, which his predecessors held, for doubt to have his doings drown'd in another man's praise. Spenser.

To think that the brightness of the sun's body above doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular error.
Watson's Architecture.

My private voice is drown'd amid the senate. Add.
Some aged man, who lives this act to see,
And who in former times remember'd me,
May say, the son, in fortitude and fame,
Oughtest the mark, and drown'st his father's name. Dryd.

TO DROWN. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.
There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never nigh drowning. Johnson's Schoolmaster.

Metethought what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of waters in my ears!
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes! Shaksf.

TO DROWSE. v. a. [droufen, Dutch.] To make heavy with sleep.
There gentle sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd
My drows'd senses uncontrol'd. Milton.

TO DROWSE. v. n.
1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.
All their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those
Of Argus; and more wakeful than to drowse,
Charm'd with Arcadian pipe, the pastoral reed
Of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton.

2. To look heavy; not cheerful.
They rather drowse'd, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men ule to their adversaries. Shaksf.

Rowley's Trifery of the World.

DRU'SWISSNESS. n. f. [from dr. swif.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.
What a strange druswiness possesses them?
In deep of night, when druswiness
Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial siren's harmony.
What succour can I hope the muse will send,
Whose druswiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend? Craefaw.
He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of druswiness and confusion upon his senses. South's Sermons.
He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in druswiness and lying a bed. Lucke.
A sensation of druswiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal, especially in young people.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

And rising forth out of her bower,
Look'd for her knight. Fairy Queen.

DRU'SWY. a. f. [from dr. swif.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.
Druswy am I, and yet can rarely sleep.
Men druswy, and drowsy to sleep, or before the fit of an ague, do use to yawn and stretch.
The howels, call'd out of their beds,
Start and raise up their druswy heads.
Drunken at last, and druswy, they depart,
Each to his house. Dryden.
2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.
Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight,
Up rose from druswy couch.
While thus he rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And purring streams that through the meadow stray'd,
In druswy murmurs lul'd the gentle maid. Advison.

3. Stupid; dull.
Those inadvertencies, a body would think, even our author, with all his druswy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

TO DRUB. v. a. [druber, to kill, Danish.] To thrash; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.

dishonourable work; servile occupation. Shakespeare.
My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry,
and her drudgery.
Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries,
Which they impute. South.

- To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live. Dryden.
Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow. Lucke.

- Even drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace-lion, looks gay. Thomson.
It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery. Swift.

DRU'DGINGBOX. n. f. [drudging and box.] The box out of which flower is sprinkled upon roast meat.

Not by the drudging to be recall'd. King.

DRU'DGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.] Laboriously; toilsome.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

DRUG. n. f. [drogue, French.]

1. An ingredient used in physic; a medicinal simple.
Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakspeare.

A fleet delir'd
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milten.

- And yet no doubts the poor man's draught control;
He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryden.

Judicious physick's noble art to gain!
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas, in vain!
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage. Pope.
In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker.

2. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice
Shall bear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become:
An empty name
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden.

3. A drudge.

He from his first swath proceeded
Through sweet degrees that this brief world affords,
To such as may the pangs of drugs it freely command. Shakspeare.

1. An instrument of military music, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.
Let's march without the noise of threatening drums. Shakespeare.
In drums the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole, far more loud and strong than if you would strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.
Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.
Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affright the wives, and chills the virgin's blood. Philips.
2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.
To DRUM. v. n.
1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.
2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.
Now, heart,
Be ribb'd with iron for this one attempt;
Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
Through every active limb for my relief;
Then take thy rest within the quiet cell;
For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden.

And hath the fent fo soon to dun? Swift.
When thou dost/ their parents, seldom they, Dryden.
Without a suit before the tribute, pay.
DUN n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. Phillips.
It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun, Sir, remember my bill. Arbutnot.
DUNCE n. f. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dum, the Dutch stupid.] A dullard; a dolt; a thickskul; a stupid indocile anim-l.

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd,
To tickle, on thy straw, the fickle crowd. Dryden.
Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God? Stillington.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.
DUNG n. f. [Dunc, Saxon.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon.
I judge the likeliest way to be the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung, with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon.

For when from herbs the pure part must be won,
From gross by 'filling, this is better done
By dunp'd dung than by the fire or sun. Donne.
He soon would learn to think like me,
And bless his ravish'd eyes to see
Such order from confusion sprung,
Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung. Swift.

TO DUN v. a. [from the noun.] To fatten with dung.
It was received of old, that dunging of grounds, when the West wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help. Bacon.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carry'd compost forth to dung the ground. Dryden.
DUNGEON n. f. [from dun, den, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dun-geons.] A close prison; generally spoke of a prison dark or subterraneous.

Then up he took the slumbered senseless corse,
And e're he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse. Spenser.
We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd
This place our dungen; nor our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton.

New from the North
Of Norumbegue, and the Samoc shore,
Burling their brazen dungen, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gulf, and flaw. Milton.
By imagination a man in a dungen is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature. Alais.
DUNGEON n. f. [from dun and gerk.] A fork to toils out dung

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which a but a single object to our undisturbed sentiments. Glan.

2. To fold together.

DUP LICATE adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. This, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 1, 4, 9, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4; or as the square of 2 to the square of 4. Philips. Harris. Bacon.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocal in a dupli proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again proportionally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attraction growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton.

DUP LICATE n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end
I have reserved duplicate of the most considerable. Watson.

ability. Haller.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor dur- ability. Ross.

DUR ABLE adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.
I he bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and there are strong and durabil. Walton.

With pins of adamant,
And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made,
And du-able! Milton.
The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more du-able than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

When on a day,
For time, though in eternity, apply'd
To motion, measures all things du-able
By present, past, and future, on such day
As heav'n's great year brings forth. Milton.

DURABLENESS. n. f. [from du-able.] Power of lasting; continuance.

The different confidence and durableness of the fruits wherewith they confit, are more or less. Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it.
Addison.

DURABLY. adv. [from du-able.] In a lasting manner.
There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Sidney.

DURANCE. n. f. [from durasse, law French.]

1. Its infernal furnace; the custody or power of a jailor; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in safe durance and contagious prison;
Haul'd thither by mechanic dirty hands. Shakespeare.
A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudibras.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me,
I commit myself to lasting durant. Congreve.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth high'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durant was this new made state!

How far more might y' than heaven's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DURASTION. n. f. [durastio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea wherewith we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Lacke.

2. Power of continuance.

Durastion is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Regens.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration, that it should have a due length in it. Addison.

DURE. v. n. [dure, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh.

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. [In law.] A plea used by way of exception, by him who being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DURING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure;
as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Lacke.

DURIVY. n. f. [duréty, French; durus, Latin.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancient dust burn'd fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durivy, as appeareth in the flanding theatres. Watson.

Irradiance or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durivy. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DURST. The preterite of dare.

The Christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK. adj. [duyster, Dutch.]

or blackness.

DU'SKISH. adj. [from duft.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heaven's lights, Enroll'd in duft (smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

Sight is not contented with fudlen departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a duft incline than an absolute black. Watson.

DU'SKISHLY. adv. [from duft.] Cloudily; darkly.

The fawdust burn'd fair, 'till part of the candle consumed:
the dust gathering about the snail, made the snail to burn duft. Bacon.

DU'SKY. adj. [from duft; duyster, Dutch.]

1. Inclining to darkness; obscure; not luminous;

Here lies the duft torch of Mortimer,
Chok'd with ambition of the meane sort. Shakespeare.

There fierce winds o'er duft valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.

Through the plains of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And six succeeding urge their duft light.

Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured; not clear; not bright;

They did plot
The means that duft Dis my daughter got. Shakespeare.

It is not green, but of a duft brown colour. Bacon.

When Jove in duft clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a duft yellow colour.

By mixing such powders we are not to expect a strong and full whire, such as is that of paper; but some duft obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey or dun, or rust brown. Newton.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this duft scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy.

Umbriel, a duft, melancholy sprite,
As ever fully'd the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [duft, Saxon; duft, Erie.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The duft
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakespeare.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast duft upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a foiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The scepter, learning, phisick muft
All follow this, and come to duft. Shakespeare.

Thou
Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the duft, to set them among princes. Samuel.

TO DUST. v. a. [from the noun.] To free from dust; to sprinkle with dust.

DUSTMAN. n. f. [duft and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The duftman's cart offends thy cloaths and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of adies flies. Gay.

Du'sty. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.
Arms and the dusty field I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire.
2. Covered or scattered with dust.
Even drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dustly hew,
The palace stone, looks gay.

Du'tch. ess. n. f. [dutchess, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here.
The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty.
The gen'rous god, who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens minds,
Kept drops for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.
Du'tchy. n. f. [dutch, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy.
Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern.

Du'tchy-court. n. f. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court.

Du'teous. adj. [from dut.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success.
A female softness, with a manly mind;
A dute us daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd.
Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass?

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes.
I know thee well; a servicable villain!

As duteous to the vices of thy mistresses,
As madcats would desire.
Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath relate all duteous ties.

Du'tiful. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiors; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would the kifs the ground, and thank the trees, blest the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing the thought did accompany her at their first meeting.

Du'tifully. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.
2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her.

He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,

Du'tifulness. n. f. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.
Piety, or dutifulness, to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans.
2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner.

Du'ty. n. f. [from dut.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded, you say we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine Assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine Assistance.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governors, or superiors; loyalty; piety to parents.

Thinkest thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater;
it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both atone;
Did duty to their lady as became.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually.
Otho bribed his guards at a high rate; for as often as Galba sipped with him, he used to give every foldier upon duty an aureus.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day.

See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their matter, Love, rewards their pains!
For sev'n long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and the monarch's pay!

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines that come down from Tuscany make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port.

Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law.

Dwarf. n. f. [from dwerg, Sax. dwerg, Dutch; dwerg, Swedish.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minims, of hind'ring knot-grafs made.
Such dwarfs were some kind of apes.

They but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs in narrow room
Throng numberless.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

It is a delicate plantation of trees, all well-grown, fair, and smooth: one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision.

Saw off the head of the flock in a smooth place; and let dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eristoones dismounted from his couer brave,
And to the dwarf a while his needless spear he gave.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf, dwarf, dwarf honeyfuckle.

To Dwarf. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good thorn cane, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread.

The whole fox is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species.

Dwarfish. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk;
low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gilt.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low?

This unheard faucies, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well pepp'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.

A thicket close beside the grove there flood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable multi-rooms.

Dwarfishly. adj. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

Dwarfishness. n. f. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature;
littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarf ishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm.

To Dwaule. v. a. [Dreilian, Sax. to wander; dwauler, Dan.]
To be delicious: a provincial word mentioned by Jovius.

To Dwell. v. n. preterite dwelt, or dwell'd. [dualis, old Teutonic, is stay, deity; dwell, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

If thy brother that *dwell*eth by thee be waxen poor, and be fold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant.

He shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Levit.

John Haywood and Sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwell and had possessions. Peacham.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?

Here dwell no frowns, nor anger; from these gates Sorrow flies far. Milt. n.

2. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourn'd in the land of Promise as in a strange country, *dwell*ing in tabernacles. Hebrew.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis fater to be that which we de-froy,

Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakespeare.

4. To be suspended with attention.

Th' attentive queen

Dwell on his accents, and her gloomy eyes

Sparkled with gentler fires. Smith.

5. To fix the mind upon; to hang upon with fondness.

Such was that face, on which I dwell with joy,

Ere Greece assembled, stemm'd the tides to Troy;

But parting then for that detested shore,

Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope.

6. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n and pains of hell,

And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;

But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell.

We have dwell pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Lake.

Those who defend our negotiations, dwell upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

7. DWELL, v. a. To inhabit.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes

Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth,

To town or village nigh. Milton.

DWELLER, n. f. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a *dwell*er;

and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that *dwell*er not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon.

Their cries soon waken all the *dwell*ers near;

Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryden.

DWELLING, n. f. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His *dwell*ing is low in a valley green,

Under the foot of Rauran mossy hote. Spenser.

Hazor shall be a *dwell*ing for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jer.

If he have several *dwell*ings, let him fast them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign

To visit oft the *dwell*ings of just men,

Delighted. Milt. n.

So it seems

To thee who hast thy *dwell*ing here on earth. Milton.

All *dwell*ings elie

Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp

Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,

Sea without shore. Milton.

The living few, and frequent funerals then,

Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;

And now those few, who are return'd again,

Thy searching judgments from thy *dwell*ing trace. Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,

And took its *dwell*ing in the vaulted sky. Dryden.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My *dwell*ing shall be with the heart of the field. Dan.

DWELLINGHOUSE, n. f. [from dwell and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his *dwell*inghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Abb.

DWELLINGPLACE, n. f. [dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their *dwell*ing/aces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser.

To DWINDLE, v. n. [Saxan, dwinnan.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in modern languages they receive a foster turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Abb.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought;

Their period finish'd e'er 'tis well begun. Thomson.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff. Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Cent.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a con-venticle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convocation of fathers. Atterbury.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into fictitious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Wearily 'twixt nine times nine,

Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakespeare.

How often do we see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Loise.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,

The love sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.

Of all the forces under Grenvil, there were only five hundred foot and three hundred horse left with him for the blocking up Plymouth; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

DYING. The particle of die.

1. Expiring; giving up the ghost.

2. Tinging; giving a new colour.

DYNASTY, n. f. [Grecian, dynastia.] Government; sovereignty.

Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale.

Greece was then divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes. Notes on Pope's Iliad.

DYSOCRASY, n. f. [Grecian, dysocrasia.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice; a dis-temperance, when some humour or quality abounds in the body. Di.

In this pituitous dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermissions. Flyer.

DYSENTERY, n. f. [Grecian, dysenteria, from dys and enteron.] A looseness wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood. Di.

From an unusual inconstancy of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from East to West, proceed ep-demical fevers. A. bushnot.

E A G

their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun, mounting in distance, they disappear.

Dismay'd not this
Our captains Macbeth and Banquo?

—Yes,
As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion. Shakespeare.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.
Arts still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE EYED. adj. [from eagle and eyed.] Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was rarely quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle eyed, and perfectly versed in the humours of his subjects. Hewel.

Ev'ry one is eagle eyed to see
Another's faults and his deformity. Dr. den.

EA'GLESPEED. n. f. [eagle and speed.] Swiftnefs like that of an eagle.

Abrupt, with eagle speed she cut the sky, Instant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESTONE. n. f. A stone laid to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. The stones of this kind which are most valued are flat and blackish, and found, it is said near the ear; a lesser stone being contained in the greater. Calme.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every foolish, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The sort of analogy that was supposed to be between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery. To that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. It is pretended, that the eagles seek for these stones to lay in their nests, and that they cannot hatch their young without. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the ætites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EA'GLET. n. f. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tying on her breast, and the fourth pecking at one of her eyes. Dryden.

EA'GREE. n. f. [eager, in Runic, is the ear; ægria, in Icelandic, is to applaud, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.

For as an eagle rides in triumph o'er the tide,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,

And flash'd upon the soul with equal force. Dryden.

EA'LDERMAN. n. f. [ealderman, Saxon.] The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME. n. f. [eam, Saxon; eam Dutch.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly; behold, thy dame
Forethoos the treason of thy wretched eame! Fairfax.

EAR. n. f. [cape, Saxon; ear, Dutch.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.

What fire is in my ears! Can this be true?

Stand I condemn'd?
His ears are open unto their cry. Shakespeare.

Valsalva discovered some passages into the region of the ear drum; of mighty use, among others, to make discharges of bruis.

2. That part of the ear that stands prominent.

You have heard of the news abroad: I mean, the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear killing arguments. Shakespeare.

His master shall bore his ear through with an awl. Exodus.

3. Power of judging of harmony; the sense of hearing.

4. The head; or the person: in familiar language.

Their warlike force was fore weakened, the city beaten down about their ears, and most of them wounded. Kneller.

EA'RESS. adj. [from ear.] Without any ears.

Ear-ri on high stood unabash'd D'ne,
And I'uthin flagrant from the four-c b'low. Pope.

EA'RRING. n. f. [ear and ring.] Jewels set in a ring and worn at the ears; ornament of a woman's ear.

With gold and silver they increase his store,
And gave the precious earrings which they wore. Sandys.

A lady bestowed earrings upon a favourite lamprey. Arbuth.

EA'RRY T. n. f. Reach of the ear; space within which words may be heard.

Gomez, stand you out of earshot.—I have something to say to your wife in private. Dryden.

EA'RWAY. n. f. [ear and way.] The cerumen or exudation which greases the inside of the ear.

The ear being to stand open, because there was some danger that insects might creep in thereat; therefore hath nature perforated or plaitered over the sides of the hole with caruwa, to entangle any insects that should attempt to creep in there.

Ray on the Creation.

EA'RWIG. n. f. [cave and wiga, a grub, Saxon.] A flesh-winged insect, imagined to creep into the ear.

Himself he on an earwig let;

Yet scarce lie on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curvet. Dryden.

Earwigs and wasps: seldom insect timber,

Dull never flies to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face,

Because she heard a sudden drum,
Or found an earwig in a plum. Swift.

2. By way of reproach, a whisperer; a prying informer.

EA'RWITNESS. n. f. [ear and witness.] One who attests, or can attest any thing as heard by himself.

All present were made earwitnesses, even of each particular branch of a common indictment. Hickes.

The histories of mankind, written by eye or earwitnesses, are built upon this principle. Watts.

To EAR. v. a. [ars, Latin.] To plow; to till.

He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to enjoy the crop. Shakespeare.

Meneceates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea fear them, which they ear and wound
With keels of every kind. Shakespeare.

Then we bring forth weeds,
When our quick mind lies still; and our ill, told us,
Is as our earing. Shakespeare.

A rough valley, which is neither eared nor tawn. Deane.

Five years, in the which there shall neither be eared nor harvell. Gower.

The field of love, with plow of virtue ear'd. Fairfax.

To EAR. v. n. [from ear.] To shoot into ears.

EA'RED. adj. [from ear.]

1. Having ears, or organs of hearing.

2. Having ears, or ripe corn.

The covert of the thrice ear'd field
Saw stately Ceres to her pillion yield. Pope.

EARL. n. f. [eorl, Saxon; earyl, Eric.] A title of nobility, anciently the highest of this nation, now the third.

Thanes and kindlens,

The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.
EARLDOM. n. f. [from earl.] The feignery of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.

The duke of Clarence having married the heir of the earl of Ulster, and by her having all the earldom of Ulster, carefully went about the redressing evils. Spenser.

When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shakespeare.

EARLINESS. n. f. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turkeys. Sidney.
The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

EARLY. adj. [early, Saxon, before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun;
in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meets't for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. Shakespeare.
It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some come late, so that you may have upon the same tree ripe fruits all Summer. Bacon.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipp'd in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South.

And yet my numbers please the rural throng,
Rough satyrs dance, and Pan approves the song;
The nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring. Pope.
Sickness is early old age: it teaches us a diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with the thoughts of a future.

Oh foul of honour!
Oh early hero! Smith.

EARLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betimes.
Early before the morn with crimson ray
The windows of bright heav'n opened had. Spenser.
None in more languages can show
Those arts, which you to early know. Waller.
The prince's makes her issue like herself, by infilling early into their minds religion, virtue and honour. Addison.

TO EARN. v. a. [earnian, Saxon.]
1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milton.
I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; aiming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton.
Men may discern

From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton.
Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing. Graunt.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.
The poems gained the plagiarist wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a flock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critic's prey. Swift.

2. To gain; to obtain.
I can't say where;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word;
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me. Shakespeare.

EARNEST. adj. [earnest, Saxon.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.
He which prayeth in due fort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hilker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.
On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude

Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame. Milton.
They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Dryden.

EARNEST. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Seriousness; a serious event not a jest; reality not a feigned appearance.

I take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Shakespeare.
I told you Klausus was the hapless wight,
Who earnest found what they accounted play. Sidney.
Therewith the laugh'd, and did her earnest end in jest. Spenser.
That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare.

Nor can I think that God, Creator wise!
Though threat'ning, will in earnest to destroy
Us, his prime creatures. Milton.
But the main business and earnest of the world is money, dominion, and power. Leibnitz.

We shall die in earnest, and it will not become us to live in jest. Government of the Tongue.

Sempronius, you have acted like yourself;
One would have thought you had been half in earnest. Alf.
2. [earnest frange, Danish; arnet, French.] Pledge; handied; fait fruits; token of something of the same kind in future.
The apostles term it the handied or earnest of that which is to come. Hale.

Which leader shall the doubtful vict'ry bless,
And give an earnest of the war's success. Waller.
It may be looked upon as a pledge and earnest of quiet and tranquillity. Swainson.

The mercies received, great as they are, were earnest and pledges of greater. Antony.

3. The money which is given in token that a bargain is effected.
You have conspir'd against our person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his crown
Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death. Shakespeare.
Pay back the earnest penny received from Satan, and bring away his sin. Dryden of Pope.

EARNESTLY. adv. [from earnest.]
1. Warmly; affectionately; zealously; importunately; intensely.

When earnestly they seek
Such proof, conclude they then begun to fail. Milton.
Shame is a banishment of him from the good opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires. South.
Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all-merciful and almighty God. Swainson.

2. Eagerly; desiriously.
Why to earnestly seek you to put up that letter? Shakespeare.

EARNESTNESS. n. f. [from earnest.]
1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trust,
He begg'd of me to seal it. Shakespeare.
Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects as a man may doubt, that besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and swooping of other mens spirits to such persons. Bacon.

Marcus is over warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Asch.

2. Solemnity; zeal.
There never was a charge maintained with such a flow of gravity and earnestness, which had a lighter foundation to support it. Antony.

3. Solicitude; care; intenseness.
With overtraining, and earnestness of finishing their piece, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden.

EARSH. n. f. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field.
Fires oft are good on barren earsh made. My.

With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade.
EARTH. n. f. [eorð, Saxon.]

1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; ter-rene matter.
The smiling god is seen; while water, earth, Pliny.
And air attest his bounty.

2. The terraqueous globe; the world.
Nought so vile that on the earth doth live, Shakespeare.
Put to the earth some special good doth give.
This solid globe we live upon is called the earth, though it contains in it a great variety of bodies, several whereof are not properly earth; which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it. Locke.

3. Different modification of terrene matter. In this sense it is a plural.

The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays. 3. Mells. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelias. Bell.

Earth is opaque, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't?

Shakespeare.

They can judge as fly of his worth,
As I can of these mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know.

Shakespeare.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language.

Genesis.

6. Turning up the ground in tillage, [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,

Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it below.

Tusser.

And hungry chules enur'd the nightly prey.

Tickell.

EARTHBOARD. n. f. [earth and board.] The board of the plow that shakes off the earth.

The plow reckoned the most proper for stiff black clays, is one that is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earth-board, so as to turn up a great furrow.

Mortimer.

EARTHBOUND. adj. [earth and bound.]

1. Born of the earth; terreneous; meanly born.

The wounds I make but sow new enemies;

Which from their blood, like earth-born brethren rise.

Dryd.

The God for ever great, for ever king

Who flew the earth-born race, and measures right

To heav'n's great inhabitants?

Prior.

2. Meanly born.

Earth-born Lycon shall ascend the throne.

Smith.

EARTHBOUND. adj. [earth and bound.] Fattened by the profuse of the earth.

That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earthbound root?

Shakespeare.

EARTHEN. adj. [from earth.] Made of earth; made of clay.

About my shelves

Green earthen pots, bladders, and mussy seeds

Were thusly scatter'd.

Shakespeare.

As a ruck was digging the ground by Padua, he found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn, and in this lesser a lamp clearly burning.

Hicins.

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in the boats made of earthen ware.

Arbutnot.

EARTHLAX. n. f. [earth and flex.] A kind of fibrous soil.

Of English tile, the coarser sort is called plaster, or parquet; the finer, earthlax, or salmander's hair.

EARTHLY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; fordid.

But I remember now

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm

Is often laudable; to do good, sometime

Accounted dangerous folly.

Shakespeare.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,

Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,

Meekly thou shouldst resign this earthly load

Of death, call'd life.

Milton.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known.

Hosier.

You have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,

To keep your earthly business and endeavour, at fit seasons,

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects.

Arbutnot.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven light,
All were his earthly eyes both blunt and bad.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart.

Pope.

No XLV.

4. Any thing in the world; a female hyperbole.

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,

Charm'd the small pox, or chas'd old age away,

Who would not scorn what housewife's cakes produce?

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?

Pope.

EARTH. n. f. [earth and nut.] A pignus; a root in shape and size like a nut.

It is an umbelliferous plant, with a stalk-shaped flower, consisting of many leaves orbicularly placed, which turns to a fruit composed of small oblong smooth leaves, gibbous on one side, and plain on the other. It has a fleshy suberose root. It is very common in shady woods and pastures, rising early in Spring, and flowering in May; in July the seeds are ripe, and soon after the leaves decay. Some dig up the roots, and eat them raw: they are very much like chestnuts, and not an unpleasant morsel; but boiled they are very delicious food, eaten with butter and pepper, and are esteemed very nourishing.

Milner.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root out only where they grow.

Roy.

EARTHQUAKE. n. f. [earth and quake.] Tremor or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth first, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it is used to ascend, and being preternaturally accumulated in greater quantity into one place, causes a great radiation and intumescence of the water of the air, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake.

Woodward.

These temurs were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror.

King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:

'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;

That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,

And with a silent earthquake shook his soul.

Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed.

Addison.

EARTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.] Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,

And Terrib's grave mactick pace,

Milton.

Now scarce with raven the fierce earthshaking pow'r,

Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the faving hour;

Back to their caves the bad the winds to fly,

And hush'd the built ring brethren of the fly.

Pope.

EARTHWORM. n. f. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants.

Bacon.

Him lord pronounce'd, he, O indignity!

Subjected to his service angel-wings,

And flaming ministers to watch and tend

Their earthy charge.

Milton.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthy spirits black and envious are;

I'll call up other gods of form more fair.

Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;

And in an earthy, the dark dungeon thine.

Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,

Smother'd in error, feeble, shallow, weak,

The folded meaning of your words deceit.

Shakespeare.

Nor is my flame

So

- So earthly, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Dryden.
- EASE. n. f. [aïse, French.]
1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; no solicitude.
We should not find her half so brave and bold
To lead it to the wars, and to the seas;
To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease.
The priest on skins of off-rings takes his ease,
And nightly vicious in his slumber fees. Dryden.
Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease.
In costly grots and marble palaces. Dryden.
Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Lodge.
No body is under an obligation to know every thing; knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Lodge.
2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.
That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.
Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.
3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.
Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.
4. Facility; not difficulty.
The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate;
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain. Dryden.
5. Unconstraint; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or conceits.
True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance. Pope.
- TO EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To free from pain.
Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Lodge.

1. Without difficulty.
Those move swiftly, and at a great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.
She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mein,
That made it easily foreseen
She fear'd too much to know. Prior.
2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.
Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Temple.
3. Readily; without reluctance.
I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden.
Not soon provok'd, the easily forgives;
And much the sufferer, as the much believes. Prior.

EASINESS. n. f. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd. Ben. Jonson.
Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength. Tilley.

The feigning easiness of Pindarick verse has made it easy;but it has not been considered. Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half achiev'd,

And for whose easiness I almost grieved. Dryden.

Praise the easy vigour of a line, Swift.

Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join. Swift.

To EAT. v. a. preterite ate, or eat; part. eat, or eaten. [etan, Latte.

Sax. itan, Gothick; eat, Erfc.] Latte.

1. To devour with the mouth, Ex.

Locusts shall eat the refuse of that which is escap'd from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth. Ex.

Other states cannot be accus'd for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite, because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle. Arminius.

2. To consume; to corrode. Arminius.

Thou bell of gold art worth of gold; Arminius.

Other less fine in carat is more precious, Arminius.

Preserving life in nied'ne potable: Arminius.

But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd, Arminius.

Half eat thy bearer up. Arminius.

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it. Tillotson.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound. Sharp.

3. To swallow back; to retreat. This is only used of a man's word. Sharp.

They cannot hold, but burst out these words, which afterwards they are forced to eat. Halewell.

Credit were not to be lost Halewell.

B' a brave knight errant of the post, Halewell.

That eats, perditionally, his word, Halewell.

And swears his ears through a two inch board. Halewell.

To EAT. v. n. Halewell.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed. Halewell.

He did eat continually at the king's table. Halewell.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, how is it that he eats with publicans and sinners? Halewell.

2. To take food. Halewell.

He that will not eat 'till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not stir 'till he infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish. Halewell.

3. To be maintained in food. Halewell.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want. Halewell.

Thou art past the tyrant stroke; Halewell.

Care no more to cloath and eat. Halewell.

4. To make way for corstion. Halewell.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. Halewell.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state. Halewell.

EATABLE. n. f. [from eat.] Any thing that may be eaten. Halewell.

If you all sorts of persons would engage, Halewell.

Suit well your eatables to every age. Halewell.

5. One that eats any thing. Halewell.

The Caribees and the Cannibals, almost all, are eaters of man's flesh. Halewell.

A knife, a rascal, an eater of broken meats. Halewell.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast? Halewell.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other foils. Halewell.

2. A corrosive. Halewell.

EATH. adv. [eað, Saxon.] Easily; not difficult. Halewell.

Where ease abounds, it's eat to do amiss. Halewell.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind Halewell.

Is eat to move with plants and shews of woe. Halewell.

The way was strait and eat. Halewell.

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word. Halewell.

Who hath the world not try'd, Halewell.

From the right way full eatb may wander wide. Halewell.

EATINGHOUSE. n. f. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dress'd. Halewell.

An hungry traveller slept into an eatinghouse for his dinner. Halewell.

EAVES. n. f. [eave, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house. Halewell.

Every night becomes Halewell.

With music of all sorts, and songs compos'd Halewell.

To her unworthiness: it nothing steals us Halewell.

To chide him from our eaves; for he persists, Halewell.

As if his life lay on't. Halewell.

His tears run down his beard, like Winter drops Halewell.

From eaves of reeds. Halewell.

If in the beginning of Winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty Winter. Halewell.

Usher'd with a shower fill, Halewell.

When the gull hath blown his fill, Halewell.

Ending on the rustling leaves, Halewell.

With minute drops from off the eaves. Halewell.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses. Halewell.

To EAVESDROP. v. a. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows. Halewell.

EAVESDROPPER. n. f. [eaves and drop.] A listener under windows. Halewell.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper, Halewell.

To hear if any mean to shrink from me. Halewell.

EBB. n. f. [ebba, ebblo, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.] Halewell.

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea. Halewell.

The clear fun on his wide wat'ry gla'ss Halewell.

Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew, Halewell.

As after thir; which made their flowing shrink Halewell.

From standing lake to tripping ebbs, that stole Halewell.

With soft food tow'rd's the deep. Halewell.

Hither the seas at stated times resort, Halewell.

And flue the loaden vessels into port; Halewell.

Then with a gentle ebb retire again, Halewell.

And render back their cargo to the main. Halewell.

2. Decline; decay; waste. Halewell.

You have finish'd all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of. Halewell.

This tide of man's life, after at once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again. Halewell.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years, Halewell.

Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Halewell.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Halewell.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be, Halewell.

That I his hourly ebbs of life may see. Halewell.

What is it he aspires to? Halewell.

Is it not this? To shed the flow remains, Halewell.

His last poor ebb of blood in your defence? Halewell.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.] Halewell.

1. To flow back towards the sea. Halewell.

Though my tide of blood Halewell.

Hath proudly flow'd in vanity 'till now, Halewell.

Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Halewell.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore, Halewell.

And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before. Halewell.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste. Halewell.

Well, Halewell.

Well, I am standing water ;

— I'll teach you how to flow.

— Do so : to ebb.

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

But oh he sighs ! the smiling waves decay !

For ever, lovely stream, for ever Ray !

ECCEN. } n. f. [ebennus, Latin.] A hard, heavy, black valu-ECCEN. } able wood, which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vite, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods.

Gilt by the winds extinct the signal lies,

Or smother'd in the glimmering lockets dies,

Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne.

EBRIETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed.

EBRILLADE. n. f. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIOSITY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Habitual drunkenness.
 That religion which exulteth ebriety in supernal, will neither acquire ebriety nor ebriety in their intended perversion.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullitio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; and hence any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties, is so called.

The dissolution of gold or silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a craze and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue.

ECCENTRICAL. adj. [eccentricus, Latin.]

ECCENTRICK. adj.

1. Deviating from the center.

2. Not having the same center with another circle: such circles were supplied by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Thither his course he bends

Through the calm firmament; but up or down,

By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell.

They build, unbuild, contrive,

To save appearances: they gird the sphere

With centrick, and eccentrick, & scribbled o'er,

Cycle, and epicycle, and orb in orb.

Whence it is that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick?

3. Not terminating in the point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentrick and irregular.

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties.

Then from what'er we can to sense produce,
 Common and plain, or wondrous and sublime,
 From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,
 The thoughtful soul this general inference draws,
 'Tis at an eccentrick must presuppose a cause.

ECCENTRICITY. n. f. [from eccentric.]

1. Deviation from a center.

2. The state of having a different center from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news of the Cadiz attempt.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the center of the earth's elliptical orbit.

ECCHYMOSIS. n. f. [ecchymosis.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis.

ECCLESIASTICAL. adj. [ecclesiasticus]

1. Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must of necessity belong to the duty of the minister.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers.

A church of England man has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastical government.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministrations of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church.

ECCOPROCTICS. n. f. [ἐκκοπτικός.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestine.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick.

ECHINATE. adj. [from echinus, Latin.] Bristled like an ECHINATED. adj. hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls.

ECHINUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A hedgehog.

2. A shellfish set with prickles.

3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.

4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs.

ECHO. n. f. [ἠχώ.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pious myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo
 In these woods to rebound the renowned name of a goddess.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

Babbling Echo mocks the sounds,

Replying shrilly to the well tun'd harp.

As if a double hunt were heard at once.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;

The woods shall answer, and the Echo ring.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;

The sound must seem an Echo to the sense.

3. The sound returned.

Wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,

And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow's!

With other Echo late I taught your shades

To answer, and rebound far other song!

TE ECHO. v. n.

1. To re-found; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting

All the church Echo'd.

Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;

Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!

Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her mitter'd princes hear the echoing noise,

And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.

TE ECHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our modern separatists do but Echo the same note.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;

Those peals are Echo'd by the Tyrian throng.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;

The Echo'd woes from distant rocks rebound.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. f. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

ECLAT', n. f. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprise, and clat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other. Pope.

ECLIP'TICK, adj. [ἐκλιντικόν.] Selecting; chusing at will.

Cicero gives an account of the opinions of philosophers; but was of the ecliptick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth. Watts.

ECLIP'TICA, n. f. [ἐκλιντική.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE, n. f. [ἐκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Slips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakepeare.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse. Milton.

Then suffer'd.
So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, being between the sun and the moon, hides the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon; if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Lake.

2. Darknets; obscuration.
All the paltriness of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life.
Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipse et. King.

3. ECLIPSE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign.
Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Sandys.

2. To extinguish; to put out.
Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Creech.

3. To cloud; to obscure.
They had been tokens of more than common greatness,
howsoever now eclipsed with fortune. Shakepeare.

Præfix him to his father:
Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his. Sidney.

Let other mules write his prosperous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings rethor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford. Denham.

He descended from his father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh. Dryden.

4. To disgrace.
She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him. Calamy.

Another now hath to himself engros'd
All power, and us eclips'd. Clarendon.

ECLIP'TICK, n. f. [ἐκλειπτική.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the Zodiac, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°, 30'. which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. It is this line which is drawn on the globe, and not the Zodiac. But in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs, each of which is denoted or distinguished by some ascension or constellation. Harris.

All stars, that have their distance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the Equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodward.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;
The sun revolving through th' Ecliptick way,
Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackmore.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the center of the sun, and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

Nº XLVI.

ECLIPSE, n. f. [ἐκλειψις.] A pastoral poem so called, because Virgil calld his pastoral eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Virgil gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Swift.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECYNOLOGY, n. f. [ἐκυνολογία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, ecynonon; but as being no syllable in English, it is placed here with the authorities by different orthography.

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.
By St. Paul's ecynon, the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor.

2. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudible parsimony.
Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his ecynon; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

I have no other notion of ecynon, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift.

3. Disposition of things; regulation.
All the divine and infinitely wise ways of ecynon that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hume.

4. The disposition or arrangement of any work.
In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, we shall see the ecynon and disposition of poems better observ'd than in Terence. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

If this ecynon must be observed in the minutest parts of an epic poem, what foul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivared with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryden.

5. System of motions; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid,
That by a constant separation made,
They may a due ecynon maintain,
Exclude the anxious parts, the good retain. Blackmore.

ECONOMICK, adj. [from ecynon.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.
Her quick'ning power in ev'ry living part,
Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
And doth employ her ecynomical art,
And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In ecynomical affairs, having propos'd the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.
Some are so plainly ecynomical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well fuelled. Watts.

ECPIRAC'TICKS, n. f. [ἐκπειρακτικά.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecpiRACTICK medicines. Harvey.

ECSTASY, n. f. [ἐκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them thus swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to. Shakepeare.

'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Swifling.

Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Lake.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy!
The religious pleasure of a well disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior.

A pleasure, which no language can express;
An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philips.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation of the mind.
He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit, and hearken to what I ecstasy. Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.
Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy. Shakepeare.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shakepeare.

5. Madnets; distraction. This sense is not now in use.
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like

7 T

Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy. Shakespeare.
ECSTASY, adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.
These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstatic soul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTASY, adj. [from ecstasy.]
ECSTASY, adj. [from ecstasy.]

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated to ecstasy.
There doth my soul in holy vision fit,
In pendive trance, and anguish, and ecstatic fit. Milton.
When one of them, after an ecstatic manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Sittingbourne.

In trance ecstatic may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds defend, and angels watch the round. Pope.
2. In the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstatic dreams. Pope.
3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation. I find in me a great deal of ecstatic love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

ECSTASY, n. f. [from ecstasy.] A copy.
The complex ideas of substances are ecstasies, copies, but not perfect ones, not adequate. Locke.

ECURIE, n. f. [French; equus, Latin.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDACIOUS, adj. [from edax, Latin.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDACITY, n. f. [from edax, Latin.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion: it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

TO EDDER, v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'DDER, n. f. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences, and binds or interweaves each other.

In hopping and felling, fave edder and flake, Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tusser.

E'DDY, n. f. [from eddy, eddy, and eddy, Saxon.]

1. The water that by some repulsion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

My praifes are as a bulrush upon a stream; if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in, And smiling eddis dimpled on the main. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend, Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend, Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play, Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.

E'DDY, adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whir'd around, And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground. Dryden.

EDEMATOSE, adj. [from edema.] Swelling; full of humours. See CEDEMATOUS.

A ferosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and scirrhous, according to the vicinity of the humour. Arb.

EDENTATED, adj. [from edentatus, Latin.] Deprived of teeth. Dict.

EDGE, n. f. [from ecce, Saxon.]

1. 'The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword His wife, his babes. Shakespeare.

He that will a good edge win, Must forge thick, and grind thin.

The edge of war, like an ill sheathed knife, No more shall cut his maller. Shakespeare.

'Tis slander, Whole edge is sharper than the sword. Shakespeare.

If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength. Ech.

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow it upon an edge. Mortimer.

3. Bink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton.

We have, for many years, walk'd upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.

Yes, the tall pen for freedom let me draw, When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope.

4. Sharpness; proper disposition for action or operation; intention of desire.

Give him a further edge, And drive his purpose into their delights. Shakespeare.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd, When want had set an edge upon their mind,

Their various cares their working thoughts employ'd, And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Cress.

Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryden.

5. Keenness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!

That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakespeare.

There must be no playing with things sacred, nor jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.

Nurses from their children keep edgetools.

I shall exercise upon steel, and its several forts; and what fort is fittest for edgetools, which for fighting. Mason.

E'DGEWISE, adv. [from edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgeways by the force of it. Roy.

E'DIBLE, adj. [from edib, Latin.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some flesh is not edible; as horses and dogs.

Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. Mars.

Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Aristotle.

The edible creation keeps the board.

E'DICT, n. f. [from edictum, Latin.] A proclamation of command or prohibition; a law promulgated.

When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hobbes.

The great king of Kings Hath in the table of his law commanded

That thou shalt do no murder; will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's? Shakespeare.

Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe, But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryden.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting out edicts, against gaming and hinc cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICATION, n. f. [from edificatio, Latin.]

1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word which is not designed to edification, or is less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. Improve-

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison.

EDIFICE. n. f. [edificium, Latin.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Southeyspeare.

He built

So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwelt not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton.
As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal, than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFIER. n. f. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Latin.]

1. To build.

Men have edify'd

A lofty temple, and perfume'd an altar to thy name. Chapman.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifyeth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hosier.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it becometh all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection thenceunto. Hosier.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,

Because he flew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dr. J.

3. To teach; to persuade.
You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon.

EDILE. n. f. [edilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shakespeare.

EDITION. n. f. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

These are of the second edition. Shakespeare.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new compilation upon the same ground. Burnet.

2. Republishing; generally with some revival or correcting.
The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a larger edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

EDITOR. n. f. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addison.

This non-sense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editor. Pope.

TO EDUCATE. v. a. [educare, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;

They breed, they brood, instruct and educate. Dryden.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift.

EDUCATION. n. f. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hosier.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

TO EDUCATE. v. a. [educare, Latin.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

All that can be made of the power of matter, is a receptive capacity; and we may as well affirm, that the world was educated out of the power of space, and give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educate money out of the power of the pocket. Glavinville.

His matter must have lain eternally confined to its bed of earth, were there not this agent to educate it thence.

Woodward's Natural History.

Th' eternal art educes good from ill,

Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope.

EDUCATION. n. f. [from educare.] The act of bringing any thing into view.

TO EDUCORATE. v. n. [from educis, Latin.] To sweeten.

That cruel image of the king's disgrace.

Or away fail'd to polish or refine,

And fluent Shakespeare scarce effac'd a line. Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.
Not our admission shall your realm disgrace,
Nor length of time our gratitude efface. Dryden.

EFFECT. n. f. [effectus, Latin.]

1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wife, and of others beloved, that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Silkeny.

Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power? Locke.

We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the ancient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison on Italy.

2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon's Natural History.

To say of a celebrated piece, that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison.

3. Purpose; intention; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect. 2 Chronicles.

4. Consequence intended; success; advantage.

Christ is become of no effect unto you. Galatians.

He should depart only with a title, the effect whereof he should not be possessed of, before he had very well deserved it. Glavinville.

The custom or institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished the practice of such crimes, nor lessened the numbers of such criminals. Temple.

5. Completion; perfection.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect,

And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In these, a marvelously indifferently composed fenate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect one only man should, as the spirit and soul of the residue, do all in all. Hosier.

State and wealth the business and the crowd,

Seems at this distance but a darker cloud;

And is to him, who rightly thinks elseems,

No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer

Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!

That cannot be, since I am still possessor

Of those effects for which I did the murder.

My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen. Shakespeare.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison.

TO EFFECT. v. a. [efficio, Latin.]

1. To bring to pass; to attempt with success; to achieve; to accomplish as an agent.

Being consul, I not doubt t' effect

All that you wish. Bm. Johnson.

This effectively refutes the devil, and suffers us to receive no hurt from him. Taylor.

EFFECTLESS, adj. [from effect.] Without effect; impotent; useless; unmeaning.

I'll chop off my hands;

In bootless prayer have they been held up, Shakespeare.

And they have serv'd me to effectless use.

EFFECTOR, n. f. [effector, Latin.]

1. He that produces any effect.

2. Maker; Creator.

We commemorate the creation, and pay worship to that infinite Being who was the effector of it. Darwin.

EFFECTUAL, adj. [effectual, French.]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the occasion; operative; efficacious.

The reading of Scripture is effectual, as well to lay even the first foundation, as to add degrees of farther perfection, in the fear of God. Hosier.

The communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing. Philom.

2. Veracious; expressive of facts. A sense not in use.

Reprieve my allegation, if you can;

Or else conclude my words effectual. Shakespeare.

EFFECTUALLY, adv. [from effectual.] In a manner productive of the consequence intended; efficaciously.

Sometimes the sight of the altar, and decent preparations for devotion, may compose and recover the wandering mind more effectually than a sermon. South.

This is a subject of that vast latitude, that the strength of one man will scarcely be sufficient effectually to carry it on. Woodward's Natural History.

TO EFFECTUATE, v. a. [effectuer, French.] To bring to pass; to fulfil.

He found means to acquaint himself with a nobleman, to whom discovering what he was, he found him a fit instrument to effectuate his desire. Sidney.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,

Who should better hold his place. Milton.

The more effeminate and soft his life,

The more his fame to struggle to the field. Dryden.

2. Womanlike; soft without reproach; a female not in use.

As well we know your tenderness of heart,

And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse. Shakespeare.

TO EFFEMINATE, v. a. [effeminatus, Latin.] To make womanish; to weaken; to emaculate; to unman.

When one is sure it will not corrupt or effeminate children's minds, and make them fond of trifles, I think all things should be contrived to their satisfaction. Locke.

TO EFFEMINATE, v. n. To grow womanish; to soften; to melt into weakness.

In a foolish peace both courage will effeminate and manners corrupt. Pope.

EFFEMINATION, n. f. [from effeminare.] The state of one grown womanish; the state of one emaculated or unmanly. Vices it figured; not only intemperance, or luxury, from its fecundity and superabundance, but from this mixture of sexes, degenerate effemination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO EFFERVESCE, v. n. [effervesco, Latin.] To generate heat by intestine motion.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame. Alsted.

EFFERVESCENCE, n. f. [from effervesco. Latin.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition. Abbot.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it;

put it into strong spirit of nitre, 'till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk. Greus.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any colligation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire. Woodward.

EFFETRE, adj. [effortus, Latin.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effetre.

In most countries the earth would be so parched and effetre by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest. Beauly.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit, effetre sensuality with the history of his former life. Smith.

EFFICACIOUS, adj. [efficax, Latin.] Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

A glowing drop with hollow'd steel

He takes, and by one efficacious breath Philips.

Dilates to cube or square.

EFFICACIOUSLY, adv. [from efficacious.] Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way which the striking body impels it. Digby.

EFFICACY, n. f. [from efficax, Latin.] Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, the same they tie and refrain only upon sermons. Hosier.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms of things. Peacham on Drawing.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the Gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God unto salvation. Tytus.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent. Regis.

EFFICIENCY, n. f. [from efficius, Latin.] The act of producing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs. Hosier.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident; but what that regulating efficiency should be, is easily determined. Glanville.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other. South.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of Christianity, upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed, will engage the mind in a severe search. South.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; but stands on a basis more firm, being entirely owing to the direct concurrence of the power of the Author of nature.

EFFICIENT, n. f. [efficient, Latin.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth meer natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels. Hosier.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Bright effluence of bright effluence inate. Milton.

From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light.

With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night. Prior.

EFFLUVIA. n. f. [from effluis, Latin.] Those small particles EFFLUVIUM. } which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty and fineness of which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise. Quincy.

If the earth were an electric body, and the air but the effluvia thereof, we might perhaps believe that from attraction, and by effluvia, bodies tended to the earth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetic effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere which environs the earth, can produce gravity. Woodward.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend,
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat,
And why return to seek their central seat? Blackmore.

EFFLUX. n. f. [effluxus, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing out.
Through the daily and copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer in his thigh, he was reduced to a skeleton. Harvey.

My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd. Shakspeare.

Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine. Taylor.

If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyss was broken open. Barnet.

2. Waste; the act of spilling or shedding.
When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood. Hesker.

Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And 'tablish quietness. Shakspeare.

Yet shall the be restor'd, since publick good
For private rest ought not be withheld,
'To save th' effusion of my people's blood. Dryden.

3. The act of pouring out words.
Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, often times disgrace, in most unseemable manner, the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God. Hesker.

4. Bounteous donation.
Such great force the gospel of Christ had then upon mens souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had. Hammond.

5. The thing poured out.
Purge me with the blood of my redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow. King Charles.

EFFUSIVE. adj. [from effuse.] Pouring out; dispersing.
The North-east spends its rage; and now shut up Within its iron caves, th' effusive South Warms the wide air. Thomson.

EFF.

ERT. n. f. [epeta, Saxon.] A newt; an evet; a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water.

Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders and erfs, upon which they will live.

The crocodile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the erf in our country.

EFT adv. [eft, Saxon.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly.

Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush,

With noise whereof he from his lofty speed

Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,

To hide his coward head from dying dread. Fairy Queen.

Quite confum'd with flame,

The idol is of that eternal maid;

For so at least I have prefer'd the fame,

With hands profane, from being erft betray'd. Fairfax.

EFTSOONS. [adv. erft and poons.] Soon afterwards; in a short time; again. An obsolete word.

He in their stead erfsions placed Englishmen, who possess'd all their lands. Spenser.

Erfsions the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,

Run all in haste to see that silver brood. Spenser.

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was to be thought that new wars would erfsions ensue. Kinsley.

Erfsions, O sweetheart kind, my love repay,

And all the year shall then be holiday. Guy.

E. G. [exempli gratia.] For the sake of an instance or example.

EGER. n. f. [See EAGER.] An impetuous and irregular flood or tide.

From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those eggers and flows in some estuaries and rivers; as is observable about Trent and Humber in England. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO EGGER. v. a. [eggers, Latin.] To throw out food at the natural vents.

Divers creatures sleep all the Winter; as the bear, the hedgehog, the bat, and the bee: these all wax fat when they sleep, and eggs not. Bacon.

EGESTION. n. f. [eggestus, Latin.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents.

The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, eggestion, and circulation. Hale.

EGG. n. f. [æg, Saxon; oegle, Erie.]

1. That which is laid by feathered animals, from which their young is produced.

An egg was found, having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect. Bacon.

Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible. Arbuthnot.

2. The spawn or sperm of other creatures.

Therefore think him as the serpent's egg.

Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous. Sh.

Ev'ry insect of each different kind,

In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays,

Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.

3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg.

There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chemists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

TO EGG. v. a. [eggia, to incite, Islandick; eggian, Saxon.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action.

Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing his genius, and whole ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carrieth him through every obstacle. Derham.

EGLANTINE. n. f. [eglantier, French.] A species of rose.

See ROSE.

O'er canopied with luscious woodbine,

With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine. Shakespeare.

The leaf of eglantine, not to flounder,

Outsweeten'd not thy breath. Shakespeare.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread,

A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

EGOTISM. n. f. [from ego, Latin.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego, or I; too frequent mention of a man's self, in writing or conversation.

The most violent egotism which I have met with, in the course of my reading, is that of cardinal Wolsey's; ego & rex meus, I and my king. Spectator.

EGOTIST. n. f. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spectator.

TO EGOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGREGIOUS. adj. [egregius, Latin.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits, both of art and valour. Merc.

One to empire born;

Egregius prince! whose manly childhood shew'd

His mingled parents, and portended joy

Unspeaking. Pliny.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vicious. This is the usual sense.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Holzer.

Ah me, most credulous fool!

Egregius murtherer!

And hence th' egregius wizzard shall foredoom

The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome. Shakespeare.

EGREGIOUSLY. adv. [from egregius.] Eminently; thau-fully.

Make the more thank me, love me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an ass,

And practising upon his peace and quiet,

Even to madness. Shakespeare.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated. Arbuthnot.

EGRESS. n. f. [egressus, Latin.] The act of going out of any place; departure.

And gates of burning adamant,

Bar'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of those and marble remained continuous. Watson.

EGRESSION. n. f. [egressus, Latin.] The act of going out.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the rumour; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, as if the bees pouring out.

Not in the list.

EGRET. n. f. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs. Baile.

EGRIOT. n. f. [egriot, French; perhaps from aigre, sour.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to whiten, is sweeter than the red; but the egriot is more sour. Baile.

TO EJACULATE. v. a. [ejaculari, Latin.] To throw, to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted to little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Grew.

The mighty magnet from the centre darts

This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts:

Its active rays, ejaculated thence,

Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULATION. n. f. [from ejaculari.]

1. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Taylor.

2. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of er, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye.

There is to be observed, in those dislocations which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

EJACULATORY. adj. [from ejaculari.] Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences; sudden; hasty.

The continuance of this posture might incline to er and drowsiness: they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Dryden.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

TO EJECT. v. a. [ejicio ejectum, Latin.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning falls from his throat!

Ejected sparks upon the billows float! Scott.

The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,

On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Blackmore.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction;

sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject the burden. Scott.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force

Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. L'Estrange.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch

This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,

Were but our danger; and to keep him here,

Our certain death; therefore it is decreed

He dies to-night. Shakespeare.

4. To cast away to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could never have been defended. Holzer.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejotted out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate? Swift.
EJECTIO. n. f. [ejctio, Latin.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejction of the fallen angels from heaven. Notes on the O.S. f.

2. [In physics.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory. Quincy.

EJECTMENT. n. f. [from ejct.] A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

Twice four. A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit.

Sandy's Journey.

EIGHTH. adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more;

And yet the eight appears! Shakespeare.

In the eight month should be in the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continued years,

And water her ambrosial couch with tears;

The eight, the voluntary moves to part,

Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart. Pope.

EIGHTEEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,

And leave eighteen. Shakespeare.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be fascinated if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EIGHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice nine.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam reigned Abijah. 1 Kings.

EIGHTHOLD. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EIGHTHLY. adv. [from eighth.] In the eighth place.

Eighthly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not. Bacon.

EIGHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventy-ninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain. Wilkins.

EIGHTSCORE. adj. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; an hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? Seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? And lovers absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eightscore times?

Oh weary reckoning. Shakespeare.

EIGHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,

And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shaksf.

Among all other characteristics three are most remarkable;

that is, seven times seven, or forty nine; nine times nine, or eighty one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EIGNE. adj. [aisne, Fr.] [In law.] Denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

Many assurances do also pass to godly and charitable uses alone; and it happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue a pardon un-compelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the utmost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EISAL. n. f. [eosal, Saxon.] Vinegar; verjuice; any acid.

Woo't drink up eisal, eat a crocodile?

I'll do't. Shakespeare.

EITHER. pron. [æther, Saxon; auher, Scottish.]

1. Whichsoever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,

Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,

Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare.

So like in arms their champions were,

As they had been a very pair;

So that a man would almost swear,

That either had been either. Dryden.

Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them

believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Lact.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, in the confines of several po-vinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,

The Winter banish'd, and the Spring renew'd. Dryden.

EITHER. adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or; either the one or.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon.

What perils shall we find,

If either place, or time, or other course,

Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel.

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift.

EJULATION. n. f. [ejulatio, Latin.] Outcry; lamentation; morn; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings. Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans

And ejulation, in the pangs of death,

Some call for aid neglected; some, o'erturnd

In the fierce shock, lie gasping. Philips.

EKE. adv. [eac, Saxon; oet, Dutch.] Also; likewise; beside;

moreover.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;

But all the good is God's, both power and eke will. Spenser.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart

That courage does itself exert,

'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,

That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

To EKE. v. a. [eacan, Saxon.]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eled my store,

But such eking hath made my heart fore. Spenser.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

—And mine to eke out her's. Shakespeare.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,

And eke out our performance with your mind. Shakespeare.

Your ornaments hung all,

On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,

To ek it, and to draw it out in length,

To stay you from election. Shakespeare.

4. To spin out by useless additions. [In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put ek into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.]

To ELABORATE. v. a. [elabore, Latin.]

1. To produce with labour.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more and more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant.

Arabist on Aliments.

ELABORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Latin.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Personalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate deperate designs. King Charles.

At least, on her bestow'd

Too much of ornament, of outward show

Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton.

Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage

Drawn to the life in each elaborate page. Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the lower people. Swift.

ELABORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.

Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton.

I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELABORATION. n. f. [from elaborate.] Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition? This is but an idle pomp. Ray.

To ELANER. v. a. [elaner, French.] To throw out; to dash;

to cast as a dust.

While thy unerring hand elan'd

Another, and another dart, the people

Joyfully repeated to I. Prior.

Harsh words, that, once elan'd, must ever fly

Irrevocable. Prior.

To ELAPSE. v. n. [elapsus, Latin.] To pass away; to glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a doctile season, a learning time in youth, which, suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clariff.

ELASTICAL. } adj. [from elastic.] Having power of re-ELASTICK. } turning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastic engines did the rear

The flarry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.
 If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to preffion, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastic, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastic and strong. Arbutnot.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastic power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.
ELASTICITY. n. f. [from elastic.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute string will bear a hundred weight without rupture;
 but, at the same time, cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raises the weight. Arbutnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,

And were my elasticity and fire. Pepr.
ELATE. adj. [elatus, Latin.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!

Too soon dejected, and too soon elate! Pope.

I, el mind elate, and scornful fear,

Thus with new taunts insult the monster's car. Pope.

TO ELATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.

2. To exult; to heighen. An unusual fence.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,

Elate his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

ELATERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, in fra-ments of flat and thin cakes, seldom thicker than a shilling.
 It is light, of a friable texture; a pale, dead, whitish colour, and an acrid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of the wild cucumber; the seeds of which swim in a large quantity of an acrid and almost caustic liquor. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELATION. n. f. [from elate.] Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

ELBOW. n. f. [elbow, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,

You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure, or angle.

Fruit-trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:

Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow. Shakespeare.

ELBOWCHAIR. n. f. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

ELBOWROOM. n. f. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;

It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakespeare.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbow- room for them, and for the adventures also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty, to provide elbowroom for his confidence to have its full play in.

South's Sermons.

TO ELBOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shole.

2. To push; to drive to distance; to encroach upon. Dryden.

It thrusts and stretches out.

And elbows all the kingdoms round about.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,

He'll make mad work, and elbow all his neighbours. Dryden.

TO ELBOW. v. n. To jut out angles.

ELD. n. f. [elbs, Saxon; eld, Scottish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,

As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld. Spenser.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

Thy blazed youth

Becomes affluage, and doth beg the alms

Of pallid eld.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,

If likewise he some fair one wedded not,

Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot

Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton.

Shakespeare.

ELDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old, [eale, ealbor, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; surer;
 having the privileges of primogeniture.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters confirming themselves in attire to the example of their elder sisters. Hovier.

Let still the woman take

An elder than herself; so wears she to him,

So sways the level in her husband's heart. Shakespeare.

How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;

That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,

Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father dis-among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple stands;

Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands!

Whate'er proud Rome, or awful Greece beheld,

Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

ELDERS. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim.

Our elders say,

The barren, touched in this holy chafe,

Shake off their sterile curse.

Among the Lacedæmonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so they are called, elder men. Raisin.

The blessing youth their virtuous awe disclose,

And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Swiss.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, if it will be no better, c'en carry you head as your elders have done before ye. L'Estrange.

I lose my patience, and I own it too,

Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;

While, if our elders break all reason's laws,

Those fools demand not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say amen. Hovier.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiastics.

8. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kikpolity in sessions, presbyteries, synods and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd

Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude

Chaos of presbytry, where laymen ride

With the same woolpack clergy by their side. Clarendon.

ELDER. n. f. [ellara, Saxon.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monoptalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by five succulent berries, having three seeds in each. It may be easily propagated from cuttings or seeds; but the former, being the most expenditious method, is generally practised. The season for planting their cuttings is any time from September to March, thrusting them six or eight inches into the ground. Darce.

Elder is near London propagated for medicinal use. Miller.

Look for thy reward

Amongst the nettles at the elder tree.

Which overhades the mouth of that same pit. Shakespeare.

Then seek the bank where flowering elders crowd. Tem.

ELDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; budding upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift.

ELDERSHIP. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;

But some respect is to my birthright due:

My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden.

Nor were the eldership

Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,

If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Ran.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

Here were the seeds sown of that controversy which sprung between Beza and Elanus, about the matter of ecommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity for that purpose. Hovier.

ELDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old

[eals, ealson, ealorze, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; the child that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon

Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter Shakespeare.

The prince of Cumberland.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,

It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space. Dryden.

2. The

2. The person that has lived most years.

Eldst parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Loct.

ELECAMPANE. n. f. [helenium, Latin.] A plant, named also flavort.

It hath a radiated flower, whose florets are hermaphrodite; but the semi-florets are female: both these are yellow. The ovaries rest on a naked placenta, crowned with down: all these parts are included in a scaly cup. To these notes may be added, the leaves growing alternately on the stalks, and the flowers on the top of the branches. Botanists enumerate thirty species of this plant. The first is the true elecampane, used in medicines: it grows wild in moist fields and meadows, and is cultivated in gardens, to furnish the shops with roots, which is the only part of the plant in use. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill's Mat. Med.

ELECT. v. a. [electus, Latin.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king, though young;
And Lewis of France, elect first, begu'd. Daniel.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, elected a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest; so is my will. Milton.

ELECT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Of singular integrity and learning;
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause. Shakespeare.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Stylife.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A virtuous liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

ELECTION. n. f. [electio, Latin.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would choose the meetest? Whitgift.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

But natural necessity, begot. Milton.

As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and choosing will?
Now, if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still. Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will choose. Rogers.

4. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remis in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

5. The ceremony of a public choice.

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addison.

ELECTIVE. adj. [from elect.] Exerting the power of choice; regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will pay positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodnefs consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfit for actual abroad. Temple.

ELECTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern. Roy.

N° XLVI.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Græw.

ELECTOR. n. f. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the bribe's electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELECTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELECTORATE. n. f. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison.

ELECTRICAL. n. f. [electrum, Latin.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electer, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELECTRICAL. adj. [from electrum. See ELECTRE.]

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so sublimation of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a spiæe, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electric than magnetic, it was wonderful what Helmsont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistrery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such agitation as to emit light. Newton.

ELECTRICITY. n. f. [from electric. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a multitude of turned nimble round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELECTUARY. n. f. [electuarium, Collin's Aurel.] which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves, and powders, in the consilience of honey. The form is attended with considerable inconveniences; for electuaries, generally made up with honey, or syrup, when the consilience is too thin, are apt to ferment; and when too thick, to candy. By both which the ingredients will either be entirely altered in their nature, or impaired in their virtues. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except fugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEMOSYNARY. adj. [elemosynarius.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself. Glanvill.

2. Given in charity.

ELEGANCE. n. f. [elegantia, Latin.] Beauty of art; ELEGANCY. adj. ther soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur.

St. Austine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Ruleigh.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Burnet.

ELEGANT. adj. [elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleasing with minuter beauties.

7 X

- Trifles themselves are elegant in him.
There may'st thou find some elegant retreat.
2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.
Polite with candour, elegant with ease.
- ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]
1. In such a manner as please without elevation.
2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty.
Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses.
- ELEGY. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]
1. Used in elegies.
2. Pertaining to elegies.
3. Mournful; sorrowful.
Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes.
- ELEGY. n. f. [elegis, Latin.]
1. A mournful song.
He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind.
2. A funeral song.
So on meanders banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy.
3. A short poem without points or turns.
- ELEMENT. n. f. [elementum, Latin.]
1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.
If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have.
- A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles.
- Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded.
2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed.
The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me.
- My dearest filter, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort.
- The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters.
- The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat.
- Here be four of you were able to make a good world;
for you are as differing as the four elements.
- He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element.
3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.
We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms,
by spells, and such dawdry as is beyond our element.
- Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements.
- They shew that they are out of their element, and that logic is none of their talent.
4. An ingredient; a constituent part.
Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
—One sure that promises no element
In such a business.
5. The letters of any language.
6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.
With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners.
- Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters.
- We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world.
- 1 here is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master.
- TO ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To compound of elements.
Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question.
2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.
Dull sublimary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absences, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it.
- ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]
1. Produced by some of the four elements.
If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour shew;

2. Arising from first principles.
Leeches are by some accounted poison not properly, that is, by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fallen upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood.

ELEMENTARITY. n. f. [from elementary.] Containing the rudiments or first principles; simplicity of nature; absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from elementary.] Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water.

The elementary farts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation.

ELEMEN. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in starchy masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. Its smell is acid and resinous. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less tinge of a greenish or yellowish. It is of an agreeable smell, and of an acid and bitterish taste. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound at night, and in the morning collect the resin that has run out.

ELENCH. n. f. [elenchus, Latin.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, the old sophist, who puts the most abusive elench on us.

ELEOTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cyder countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England.

ELEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.] The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal is not carnivorous, but feeds on hay, herbs, and all sort of pulse; and it is said to be extremely long lived. It is naturally very gentle; but when enraged, no creature is more terrible. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cutlidge, like a large trumpet, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands: by one blow with his trunk he will kill a camel or a horse, and will raise a prodigious weight with it. His teeth are the ivory so well known in Europe, some of which have been seen as large as a man's thigh, and a fathom in length. Wild elephants are taken with the help of a female ready for the male: she is confined to a narrow place, round which pits are dug; and these being covered with a little earth scattered over hurdles, the male elephants easily fall into the snare. In copulation the female receives the male lying upon her back; and such is his pudicity, that he never covers the female so long as any one appears in sight.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glaffes, elephants with holes.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.
High o'er the gates, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold.

ELEPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Latin.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Latin.] Pertaining to the elephant.

TO ELEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin]

1. To raise up aloft.
This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss.

2. To exalt; to dignify.
3. To raise the mind with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with it, stirs not beyond sense or reflection.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind.

4. To elate the mind with vicious pride.

5. To

To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately reduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alleged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hosier.

ELEVATE, part. adj. [from elevatus.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVATION, n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Lodge.

Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul and mind. Norris.

Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hosier.

The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELEVATOR, n. f. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chiralurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

LEVEN, adj. [Zemlepen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakespeare.

LEVENTH, adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh.

LF, n. f. plural elvis, [elvis, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places.

Through this house give glimmering light,

By the dead and drowlie fire;

Every elvis, and fairy sprite,

Hop as light as bird from brier. Shakespeare.

The king of elvis and little fairy queen

Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,

Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;

Of airy elvis by moon-light shadow seen,

The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elvis;

And are but fatires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, and angel or elf;

For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

ELF, v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night;

and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf- locks. Hammer.

My face I'll grime with filth,

Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

ELLOCK, n. f. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by lives.

This is that very Mab,

That plats the manes of horses in the night,

And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs,

Which, once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakespeare.

ELICITE, v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch up by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evinced in the contemplation of man. Hale.

He elicits those acts out of the meer laps'd state of human nature. Chryse.

ELICIT, adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought into possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the mal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily anx'd to these virtues. Hammond.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action exceeds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of will. South.

ELICATION, n. f. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elication which the schools intend, is a deducing of power of the will into act: that drawing which they intend, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramh.

ELIDE, v. a. [elido, Latin.] To cut in pieces.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hosier.

ELIGIBILITY, n. f. [from eligibile.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to chuse them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes.

ELIGIBLE, adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Adams.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarissa.

ELIGIBLENESS, n. f. [from eligibile.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINATION, n. f. [eliminatio, Latin.] The act of banishing;

the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dist.

ELISION, n. f. [elipsis, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, th' attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon.

ELIXATION, n. f. [elixatio, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliment, and its elication in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR, n. f. [Arabic.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker confidence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd;

When cordials and elixirs fail'd,

On your pale cheek he dropp'd the flow'r,

Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorifies his pregnant pot,

If by the way to him befall

Some odorous thing, or medicinal. Denne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here

Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton.

ELK, n. f. [elc, Saxon.]

The elk is a large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyish, in Summer it is paler; generally three inches in length, and equaling horsehair in thickness. The upper lip of the elk is large. The articulations of its legs are close, and the ligaments hard, so that its joints are less pliable than those of other animals. The horns of the male elk are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Elks live in herds, and are very timorous. The hoof of the left hinder foot only, has been famous for the cure of epilepsies; but it is probable, that the hoof of any other animal will do as well. Hill.

And, scarce his head

Rais'd o'er the heavy wreath, the branching elk

Lies slumber'g fallen in the white abyss. Thomson.

ELL, n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;

Look not on pleasures as they come, but go;

Defend not the last virtue; life's poor span

Make not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Hosier.

ELLIPSIS.

ELLIPSE. n. f. [Ellipsis, Gr.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18. Ham.
2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbits, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bowley.
ELLIPTICAL. adj. [from ellipsis.] Having the form of an ellipsis. } elliptis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptic orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptic. Cheyne.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne.

ELM. n. f. [Ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The flower consists of one leaf, striped like a bell, having many stamens in the centre: from the bottom arises the point, which becomes a membranaceous or leafy fruit, almost heart-shaped; in the middle of which is placed a pear-shaped seed-vessel, containing one seed of the same shape. The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. It is generally believed neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out, where they have had long possession; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots, which will fend forth various twigs. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them. They are also proper to plant at a distance from a garden, or building, to break the violence of winds; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near a garden where fruit-trees or other plants are placed, because the roots of the elm run superficially near the top of the ground, and will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of their nutriment. Miller.

The rural feat,
Whole lofty elms and venerable oaks
Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early Spring, his airy city builds. Thompson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.
Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whole weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakespeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech.
A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Watts.

2. Eloquence; flow of language.
Whole taste, too long forborne, at first essay Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise. Milton.
As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts,
so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

3. The power of expression or diction.
The third happiness of this poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

ELOCY. n. f. [eloge, French.] Praise; paucyrick.
Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Watson.
If I durst say all I know of the elogies received from abroad concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject. Heldar.

TO ELOCUTE. v. a. [elocuter, French.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From worldly cares himself he did elute,
And greatly thummed many exercise. Fairy Queen.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as the doth us;
How I shall stay, though the eligne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Dante.

TO ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.] To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

TO ELONGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the South point of the compass varyeth twelve degrees unto the West; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varyeth eastward. Brown's Vulgar Errata.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Ariscia.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wifem.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another. The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glazville.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent, or elongation. Brown's Vulgar Errata.
TO ELOPE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dutch.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Adison.

What from the dame can Paris hope?

She may as well from him elope. Pope.

The fool whose wife elopes more thrice a quarter,

For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELOPEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from; just desertion; rejection of lawful power.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom the first breach of the matrimonial vow. Adison.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of this principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Adison.

ELOPS. n. f. [loap.] A fish; reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and asp, and amphibia dire,
Cerales horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And diapas. Milton.

ELOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shakespeare.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And say she uttereth piercing eloquence. Shakespeare.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Isaiah.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we do on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [eller, Saxon.] Other; one besides: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to let him. Shakespeare.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom. Bible.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;
He did it when he had nothing else to do. Dante.

ELSE. adv. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, and think profane to view:
This fault-finder, else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause. Watts.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,
And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

E'LESEWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Bible.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gibon, Nahin
so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Revel.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice.
Shalt be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Paradise Reg.
Although feasted bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that disgrace and injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate ap-pointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges to appoint where it is fit for the minister to stand.

Hobbes.

Let us no more contend, nor blame

Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere.

Milton.

Beflow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;

My mother's daughter knows not how to fear.

Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing.

To ELUCIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Latin.] To explain; to clear;
to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

ELUCIDATION. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

ELUCIDATOR. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expolitor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantic elucidators. Abbott.

To ELUDE. v. a. [eludo, Latin.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the retributions of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to fee me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

ELUSIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happines of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be elusive by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves and demons hear. Pope.

ELVLOCK. n. f. [from elves and lock.] Knots in the hair lu-periously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ELVISH. adj. [from elves, the plural of elf: it had been written more properly elfish.] Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

'Thou elvish mark, abstruse, rioting hog!
The slave of nature, and the son of hell!

Shakespeare.

No more hath been so bold,

Or of the latter, or the old,

Those elvish secrets to unfold,

Which lie from others reading. Dryden.

ELUMINATED. adj. [elumbo, Lat.] Weakened in the loins. Ditt.

ELUSION. n. f. [eluso, Latin.] An escape from enquiry or examination; a fraud; an artifice.

An appendix, relating to the transmutation of metals, describes the impurities and elusions of those who have pretended to it. Woodward.

ELUSIVE. adj. [from elude.] Practising elusion; using arts to escape.

Elusive of the bridal day, she gives Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives. Pope.

ELUSORY. adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude; tending to deceive; fraudulent; deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Elusory flights, ambuscade retreats, and elusory tergiversation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ELUTE. v. [eluo, Latin.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious; because it is harder to be eluted by the blood. Arbutnot.

To ELUTRIATE. v. a. [elutrius, Latin.] To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs. Arbutnot.

LYSIAN. adj. [elysion, Latin.] Pertaining to Elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,
Rolls o'er elysion flowers her amber stream. Milton.

ELYSIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls; any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to fill up my mouth;
So should'st thou easter turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium. Shakespeare.

EM. A contraction of them.

For he would coin and counterfeit
New words with little or no wit;
And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

To EMACIATE. v. a. [emacio, Latin.] To waste; to deprive of flesh.

All dying of the consumption, die emaciated and lean.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

To EMACIATE. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine; to grow lean.
He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein. Brown.

EMACIATION. n. f. [emaciat, Latin.]

1. The act of making lean.

2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness from a phthisis, or from an hectic fever. Graunt.

EMACULATION. n. f. [emaculo, Latin.] The act of freeing any thing from spots or foulness. Ditt.

EMANANT. adj. [emanant, Latin.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale.

EMANATION. n. f. [emanatio, Latin.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it freemed by conatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun. Sedth.

2. That which issues from another substance; an effluence;
effluvia.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrops, oils, and viscidities, which, spun, at length retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heavenly face;

Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace;

So faultless was the frame, as if the whole

Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanation of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires

That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;

Each art he prompts, each charm he can create;

Whate'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

EMANATIVE. adj. [from emanare, Latin.] Issuing from another. Ditt.

To EMANCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Latin.] To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

Having received the probable inducements of truth, we become emancipated from testimonial engagements. Brown.

By the twelve tables, only those were called unto the intellect succession of their parents that were in the parents power, excluding all emancipated children. Alfisi.

They foon emancipated themselves from that dependance.

EMANCIPATION. n. f. [from emancipate.] The act of sitting free; deliverance from slavery. Arbutnot on Guin.

Obstinacy in opinions holds the dogmatist in the chains of error, without hope of emancipation. Glanville.

To EMARGINATE. v. a. [marginis, Latin.] To take away the margin or edge of any thing. Ditt.

To EMASCULATE. v. a. [emasculo, Latin.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of virility.

When it is found how many cws, suppose twenty, one ram will serve, we may geld nineteen, or thereabouts; for if you emasculate but ten, you shall, by promiscuous copulation, hinder the increase. Graunt.

2. To effeminate; to weaken; to vitiate by unmanly softness.

From wars and from affairs of state abstain;

Women emasculate a monarch's reign. Dryden.

Dangerous principles not only impose upon our understandings, but emascuate our spirits, and spoil our temper.

Collier on Pride.

EMASCULATION. n. f. [from emasculate.]

1. Castration.

2. Effeminacy; womanish qualities; unmanly softness.

To EMBALL. v. a. [emballer, French.]

1. To make up into a bundle.
2. To bind up; to inclose.
Below her ham her weed did somewhat train,
And her straight legs most bravely were embold
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.
I would not be a queen
For all the world.
— In faith, for little England
You'd venture an embolus. Shakespeare.
To EMBA'LM. v. a. [embolomer, French; embolamar, Span.]
To impregnate a body with aromatics, that it may resist putrefaction.

Embalme,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakespeare.
I would shew future times
What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:
Verbe embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,
Preferre frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch. Dennie.
Mute! at that name thy sacred frowns flied;
Thofe tears eternal, that embalm the dead. Pope.
EMBA'LME. n. f. [fr. m. embalme.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.
The Romans were not to good embalmers as the Egyptians,
So the body was utterly consumed. Bacon.

- To EMBA'R. v. a.* [from bar.]
1. To shut; to inclose.
Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight;
Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years besieg'd to make them thrall. Fairy Queen.

In form of airy members fair embar'd,
His spirits pure were subject to our fight. Fairfax.
2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.
Translating the mart, which commonly followed the English cloth, unto Calis, he embarked all further trade for the future. Bacon.

If this commerce twixt heav'n and earth were not Embar'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and powerfully on us. Dennie.

- EMBAR'RATION. n. f.* [from embark.]
1. The act of putting on shipboard.
The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.
2. The act of going on shipboard.
EMBAR'GO. n. f. [embargar, Spanish.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.
He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin. Bacon.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez. Wotton.
I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Dryden.

- To EMBA'RK. v. a.* [embarquer, French.]
1. To put on shipboard.
Of mankind, so numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom embar'd. Milton.
The king had likewise provided a good fleet, and had caulked a body of three thousand foot to be embarked on those ships. Clarendon.

Straight to the ships Encas took his way,
Embar'd his men, and skim'd along the sea. Dryden.

I saw my friend a little embarrass'd, and turned away. Spekt.
EMBAR'ASSMENT. n. f. [from embarrass.] Perplexity; entanglement.

Let your method be plain, that your hearers may run through it without embarrassment, and take a clear view of the whole. Wotton.

- To EMBASE. v. a.* [from base.]
1. To vitiate; to deperuate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, so that the virtue of the seed is not worn out; whereas in a tree it is embased by the ground. Bac.
I have no service or ignoble end in my present labour, which may, on either side, restrain or embase the freedom of my poor judgment. Wotton.
I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibility shall be forced to bend. King Charles.

- A pleasure high, rational, and angelical; a pleasure embased with no appendant sting; but such a one as being heavy in the mouth, never turns to gall or gravel in the belly. South.
2. To degrade; to vilify.
Joy of my life, full oft for loving you
I blest my lot, that was so lucky plac'd;
But then the more your own mishap I rue,
That are so much by so mean love embas'd. Spenser.
EMBA'SADOR. n. f. [See AMBASSADOUR.] One sent on a publick message.

Mighty Jove's embassador appear'd
With the same message.
Myself, my king's embassador will go. Devotion.
EMBA'SADRESS. n. f. A woman sent on a publick message.
With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadors replies. Gent.
EM'BASSAGE. n. f. [It may be observed, that though our EM'BASSY. n. f.] authors write almost indiscriminately embassador or ambassador, embassage or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concerning to write embassy.]
1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends; hereafter,
Will I lend ear to. Shakespeare.
When he was at Newcastle he sent a solemn embassy unto James III. king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon.

- The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threat'ning embassy. Dryden.
2. Any solemn message.
He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees. Taylor.
3. A bird was made by with such art to carry a written embassy among the ladies, that one might say, if a live bird, how taught? if dead, how made?
Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassy belong to me?
And am I left that know it? Shakespeare.

To EMBATTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order for way of battle.

The English are embattled;
To horse! you gallant princes, straight to horse! Shakespeare.
I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her demerits, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war!
Embattl'd nations find in vain
The hero's glory to refrain:
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,
In vain against his force conspire. Pope.

- To EMBAY. v. a.* [from baiguer, to bathe, French.]
1. To bathe; to wet; to wash.
In her lap a little babe did play;
His cruel sport;
For in her streaming blood he did emboy
His little hands, and tender joints embrew. Fairy Queen.
Every sense the humour sweet embay'd,
And, slumbering fast, my heart did steal away. Fairy Queen.
2. [from bay.] To inclose in a bay; to land-lock.
If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inflicter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd. Shakespeare.

To EMBELLISH. v. a. [embellir, French.] To adorn, to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.
How much more beautiful had the fountain been,
Embellish'd with her self created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryden.
The names of the figures that embellish'd the discourses of those who understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellish'd by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to show but ruins. Adrianus in his EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. f. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; additious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
Th' embellishments of life.
Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of those pious romances, the legends of the Romish church. Ascham.

- EMBERING. n. f.* The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.
For causes good for many ways,
Keep emberings well, and fasting days; Wile.

What law commands we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday.
Tuff.
EMBERS. n. f. without a singular. [æmynia, Saxon, ashes; cimynia, Ilandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopp'd, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days.
Bacon.

Or if the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will hit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom.
Milton.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He toft his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.
Crafhuu.

He said, and role, as holy zeal inspires;
He takes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden.

EMBERWECK. n. f. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from ember or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of embofch, who derives it from ymbren or emhren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks.
Ayliffe.

TO EMBEZZLE. v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecil.]
1. To appropriate by breach of trust; to turn what is intrusted in his hands to his own use.

He had embezzled the king's treasure, and extorted money by way of loan from all men.
Hayward.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EMBOLISM. n. f. [εμβολισμος.]
1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different manners in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embolisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could.
Helder.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.
EMBOLUS. n. f. [εμβολος.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulic engine, in which a chemical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels by the force of an embolus, like the heart.
A husband and Pope's Mort. Scribbles.

TO EMBOSS. v. a. [from boss, a protuberance, French.]
1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover.
Shakespeare.

Thou art a bile,
A plague fore, or embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood.
Shakespeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh em'oss;
And all his people.
Milton.

All crowd in heaps, as at a night-alarm
The bees drive out upon each others backs,
Th' emboss their hives in clusters.
Dryden.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.
Then o'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgos's death, and off rings to his ghost.
Dryden.

3. [from embosser, French, to inclose in a box,] To inclose;

And in the way, as she did weep and wail,
A knight her met, in mighty arms emboss'd.
Spenser.

4. [embossure, Italian.] To inclose in a thicket.
Like that self-begotten bird
In th' Arabian woods emboss'd.
Milton.

5. To hunt hard.
When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be emboss'd; a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be emboss'd, from bosse, French, a tumour.

Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Theffaly
Was never so emboss'd.
Shakespeare.

We have almost emboss'd him: you shall see his fall to night.
Shakespeare.

EMBOSSMENT. n. f. [from emboss.]
1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; eminence.

I with also, in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments.
Bacon.

2. Relief; rising work.
They are at a loss about the word pendentis; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alio relievo.
Aldison.

TO EMBOSTLE. v. a. [embosier, French.] To include in bottles; to bottle.

Stirom, firmer fruit
Emboss'd, long as Priamcan Troy
Withstood the Greeks, endures.
Philips.

TO EMBOVEL. v. a. [from bovel.] To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails; to extenterate.

The schools,
Embowell'd of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself.
Shakespeare.

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by;
'Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye.
Shakespeare.

The roar
Embowell'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore.
Milton.

Fossils and minerals that th' embowell'd earth Displays.
Philips.

 And you embrace th' occasion to depart.
 At first, her mother earth she holdeth dear,
 And doth embrace the world, and worldly things. Davies.
 They who are represented by the wife virgins, embraced the profession of the Christian religion, as the foolish virgins also had done. Tilton.
 3. To comprehend; to take in; to encompass; to encircle.
 4. To comprise; to include; to contain.
 Low at his feet a spacious plain is plac'd, Denham.
 Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd.
 5. To admit; to receive.
 Fenton, heav'n give thee joy!
 What cannot be chew'd, must be embrac'd. Shakespeare.
 If a man can be fully assured of any thing, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

6. To find; to take.
 Fleance, his son,
 Whose absence is no less material to me
 Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
 Of that dark hour. Shakespeare.
 7. To squeeze in a hostile manner.
 To EMBRACE. v. n. To join in an embrace.
 Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
 And wander we to see thy honest son,
 Who will of thy arrival be full joyous. Shakespeare.

- EMBRACE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Clasp; fond pressure in the arms; hug.
 Thames, the most lov'd of all the ocean's fons
 By his old sire, to his embraces runs. Denham.
 2. An hostile squeeze; crush.
 EMBRACEMENT. n. f. [from embrace.]
 1. Clasp in the arms; hug; embrace.
 Thus death becomes a rival to us all,
 And hopes with foul embracements her to get,
 In whose decay virtue's fair shrine must fall. Sidney.
 There cherishing one another with dear, though chaste Embracements, with sweet, though cold kisses, it might seem that Love was come to play him there without darts. Sidney.
 2. Comprehension. Davies.
 Nor can her wide embracements filled be.
 3. State of being contained; inclosure.
 The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon.

4. Conjugal endearment.
 I would freelier rejoice in that absence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracement of his bed, where he would fiew most love. Shakespeare.
 EMBRACER. n. f. [from embrace.] The person embracing.
 Yet they are the greatest embracers of pleasure of any other upon earth; and they esteem of pearls as pebbles, so they may satisfy their gust, in point of pleasure or revenge. Howell.

 wall, through which the cannon is pointed; battlement.
 To EMBRAVE. v. a. [from brave.] To decorate; to embellish;
 to deck; to grace; to adorn.
 So, both agree their bodies to engrave;
 The great earth's womb they open to the sky,
 And, with sad cyperus, seemly it embrace. Spenser.
 To EMBROCATE. v. a. [embrace, French.] To rub any part diseased with medicinal liquors.
 I returned her a glass with oil of roses and winegar, to embrace her arm. W'jeman.

- EMBRICATION. n. f. [from embrace.]
 1. The act of rubbing any part diseased with medicinal liquors or spirits.
 2. The lotion with which any diseased part is washed or embrocated.
 We endeavour to ease by discutient and emollient cataplasms, and embracements of various sorts. W'jeman.
 To EMBROIDER. v. a. [broder, French.] To border with ornaments; to decorate with figured work; to diversify with needlework; to adorn a ground with raised figures.
 Embroider'd so with flowers it had flood,
 That it became a garden of a wood. Waller.
 Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover, but in a suit of her own embroidering. Spectator.
 Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
 This have the floor, and that the table spreads. Pope.
 EMBROIDERER. n. f. [from embroider.] One that adorns cloaths with needlework.
 Blue silk and purple, the work of the embroiderer. Etic.
 EMBROIDERY. n. f. [from embroider.]

- Write,
 In em'rald tufts, flow'rs puffed, blue and white,
 Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
 Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakespeare.
 Laces and embroideries are more costly, than either warm or comely. Bacon.
 Next these a youthful train their vows express'd,
 With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dress'd. Pope.
 2. Variegation; diversity of colours.
 If the natural embroidery of the meadows were helpt and improved by art, a man might make a pretty landscape of his own possessions. Spectator.
 To EMBROIL. v. a. [brouiller, French.] To disturb; to confuse; to distract; to throw into commotion; to involve in troubles by passion and discord.
 I had no passion, deluge, or preparation to embroil my kingdom in a civil war. King Charles.

- Rumour next, and chance,
 And tumult and confusion, all embroil'd,
 And discord with a thousand various mouths, Milton;
 When she found her venom spread so far,
 The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
 Rais'd on her dusky wings the cleaves the skies. Dryden.
 2. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for trait or burn.
 That knowledge, for which we boldly attempt to rife
 God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Dc. of Piety.
 To EMBROTHEL. v. a. [brothel, Israel.] To inclose in a brothel.
 Men, which chuse
 Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute, Worse than embrothel'd trumpets prostitute. Donne.

 finished.

- The company little suspected what a noble work I had then in embryo. Swift.
 EME. n. f. [same, Saxon.] Uncle. Now obsolete.
 Whilst they were young, Caliban their aun
 Was by the people chosen in their stead;
 Who on him took the royal diadem,
 And goodly well it long time governed. Spenser.
 EME'NDABLE. adj. [emenda, Latin.] Capable of emendation; corrigible.

- EMENDATION. n. f. [emenda, Latin.]
 1. Correction; alteration of any thing from work to better.
 The effence and the relation of every thing in being, is fitted, beyond any emendation, for its action and use; and flows it to proceed from a mind of the highest understanding. Grew.
 2. An alteration made in the text by verbal criticism.
 EMENDATOR. n. f. [emenda, Latin.] A corrector; an improver; an alterer for the better.

- EMERALD. n. f. [emeraude, French; smaragdus, Latin.] A green precious stone.
 The emerald is evidently the same with the antient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems: it is found from the sixteenth of an inch in diameter, to the size of a walnut. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. It is of all the various shades of green, from the deepest to the palest, and doubtless is found at times wholly colourless; but then it is esteemed, by our jewellers, as white sapphire. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the sapphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness: they are only found in the kingdom of Cambay. The American, called by our jewellers oriental emeralds, are found in Peru, of the hardness of the garnet:
 the European are somewhat softer, but harder than crystal, and found in Silecia. The coloured crystals, said as occidental emeralds, are from the mines of Germany. Hill.
 Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel the emerald? Sidney.
 The emerald is a bright grass green: it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ores. Woodward.
 Nor

Not deeper verdure dies the robe of Spring,
When first the gales give it to the southern gale,
Than the green emerald throws.

To EMERGE. v. n. [emerge, Latin.]

1. To rise out of any thing in which it is covered.

They emerged, to the upper part of the spirit of wine, as much of them as lay immersed in the spirit.

The mountains emerged, and became dry land again, when the waters, after their violent agitation was abated, retired into the lower places.

Thetis, not unmindful of her son,

Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon,

Purs'd their track.

2. To issue; to proceed.

If the piston was turned about its axis that way, which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer or more.

3. To rise; to mount from a state of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.

Darkness, we see, emerges into light;

And thinning fogs depend to fable night.

EMERY. n. f. [emery, Latin; esmeril, French.] Emery is an iron ore, considerably rich. It is usually of a dusky brownish red on the surface; but, when broken, of a fine bright iron grey, but not without some tinge of redness, and is spangled all over with shining specks. It is also sometimes very red, and then contains veins of gold. It is found in the island of Guernsey, in Tuscany, and many parts of Germany. It has a near relation to the magnet. Emery has been recommended by the ancients as an abersenger, but it must be used with great caution. It is prepared by grinding in mills; and the lapidaries cut the ordinary gems on their wheels by sprinkling the wetted powder over them; but it will not cut diamonds. It is useful in cleaning and polishing steel.

The British ocean shall such triumphs boast,
That those who now disdain our trade to share,
Shall rob like pyrates on our wealthy coast. Dryden
I take the prosperous estate of this great emporium to be owing to those influences of charity. Atterbury

TO EMPOVERISH. v. a. [from pauper, French.]

1. To make poor; to depauperate; to reduce to indigence.
Some they might talk better as they lay together, they empoverish'd then cloaths to enrich their bed, which, for that night, might well scorn the shrine of Venus. Sidney

Your's sounds aloud, and tells us you excel
No less in courage than in fingering well;
While, unconcern'd, you let your country know, Waller
They have empoverish'd themselves, not you.

For sense of honour, if it empoverisheth a man, it is, in his esteem, neither honour nor sense. South

Fresh roses bring
To strow my bed, 'till the empoverish'd Spring Confess her want. Prior

Let your nimble feet

Tread subtle circles, that may always meet

In point to him; and figures, to express

The grace of him, and his great empress. Ben. Johnson

2. A female invested with imperial dignity; a female sovereign.

Empress of this fair world, refulgent Eve! Milton

Yet, London, empress of the northern clime,

By an high fate thou greatly didst expire. Dryden

Wisdom, thou say'st, from heav'n receiv'd her birth;

Her beams transmitted to the subject earth:

Yet this great empress of the human soul,
Does only with imagin'd power controul,
If restless passion, by rebellious sway,
Compels the weak usurper to obey.

EMPRESE. n. f. [from emprise, French.] Attempt of danger; undertaking of hazard; enterprise. Prior

Noble minds, of yore, allied were

In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Spenser

A double conquest must you make,

If you atchieve renown by this emprise. Fairfax

Fierce faces threaten'g wars;

Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise. Milton

'Tis thus, 'till the sun had travell'd half the skies,

Ambush'd we lie, and wait the bold emprise. Pope

EMPTIER. n. f. [from empty.] One that empties; one that

His coffers found

With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakespeare

3. A void space; vacuity; vacuum.

Nor could another in your room have been,

Except an emptiness had come between. Dryden

The ordinary air in which we live and respire, is of so thin a composition, that sixteen thousand one hundred and forty-nine parts of its dimensions are mere emptiness and nothing; and the remaining one only, material and real substance.

4. Want of substance or solidity.

'Tis this which causes the graces and the loves to take up their habitations in the hardest marble, and to subside in the emptiness of light and shadow. Dryden

5. Unsatisfactoriness; inability to fill up the desires.

O frail estate of human things,

Now to our cost your emptiness we know. Dryden

Form the judgment about the worth or emptiness of things here, according as they are or are not in use, or relation to what is to come after. Atterbury

6. Vacuity of head; want of knowledge.

External smiles his emptiness betray,

As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope exchanging his golden armour with the brazen one of Tydides, was emptiness or commutation. Aristaenetus

EMPTY. adj. [from æmptus, Saxon.]

1. Void; having nothing in it; not full.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart;

but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest found. Shakespeare

The pit was empty, there was no water in it. Gin

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that; there still remains one vessel empty. Barnes

2. Devoid; unfurnished.

Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress?

Or else a rude despoiler of good manners,

That in civility thou seem'st to be empty? Shakespeare

Mr. Boyle has shew'd, that air may be rarified above ten thousand times in vessels of glass; and the heavens are much emptier of air than any vacuum we can make below. Newton

3. Unsatisfactory; unable to fill the mind or desires.

4. Without any thing to carry; unburdened; unfringed.

He alleges that the satyrs carried platters full of fruit in their hands; but if they had been empty handed, had they been ever the larger satyrs? Dryden

Yet all the little that I got, I spent;

And still return'd as empty as I went. Dryden

5. Vacant of head; ignorant; unskilful; unfurnished with materials for thought.

How comes it that so many worthy and wise men depend upon so many unwor by empty headed fools! Raisin

if two mens grounds lying together, the one pretes too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowd.
But this usurper his encroachment proud
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton.
As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.
If it be a man's known principle to depart from his right, ill men will make unjust encroachment upon him. Asterbury.
The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

cially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Acubant's History of John Bull.
- ENCYSTED, adj. [ἐνυστ.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.
Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained, and are farther distinguished by the nature of their contents. Sharp.
END.

END. n. f. [end, Saxon]

1. The extremity of any thing materially extended.
Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. Samuel.
The extremity and bounds of all bodies have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.

2. The last particle of any assignable duration.
If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now tow'rd's earth doth bend,
Then we might fear that virtue, hence the fell
So low as a woman, should be near her end. Dante.

3. The conclusion or cessation of any action.
Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Gen.
Yet vainly mott their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end. Drom.

- The causes and delings of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Po. r.

4. The conclusion or last part of any thing; as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.

5. Ultimate state; final doom.

My guilt be on my head, and there's an end! Shakspeare.

8. Death; fate; decease.
I determine to write the life and the end, the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Wotton.

9. The soul receives intelligence,
By her near genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel.

- 'Tis the great business of life to fit ourselves for our end, and no man can live well that has not death in his eye. L'E.

- Remember Milo's end,
Wedge'd in that timber which he strove to rend. Rafcom.

- My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forsake me in my end. Rafcomman.

- Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end. Pope.

10. Abolition; total loss.
There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.

11. Cause of death; destroyer.
Take heed you daily not before your king,
Left he that is the supreme king of kings,
Confound your hidden falshood, and award
Either of you to be to the other's end. Shakspeare.

12. Consequence; event.
O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end.
The end of these things is death. Romans.

- Fragment; broken piece.
Thus I cloathe my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of Holy Writ,
And seem a saint. Shakspeare.

13. Purpose; intention.
There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republic, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clar.

- What can thy end malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee?
Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.
